INTRODUCTION

TRAVELLERS' tales, sober and fantastic, have always commanded the attention of a numerous reading public. Long after these accounts of travel have satisfied the immediate curiosity of the public they have yielded up to historians curious and precious information about new lands and peoples; they have, under scholarly analysis, greatly contributed to our understanding of the evolution of ideas and the formation of public opinion. The accounts of French missionaries and explorers in America during the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries have for many years engaged the efforts of collectors and scholars. The labors of Reuben G. Thwaites, V. H. Paltsits, Gustave Lanson, Gilbert Chinard, and Geoffry Atkinson (to mention the most notable of the recent scholars in the field) have laid the foundations of numerous scientific studies and have made these materials accessible and familiar to the larger reading public. No similar amount of attention has yet been devoted to the French travellers in America during the second half of the eighteenth century. Bernard Faÿ and Howard Mumford Jones have utilized, with brilliance and discernment, a part of these materials in their studies of Franco-American relations.[1] Charles H. Sherrill and Alexandre Capitaine have each devoted a volume to the French visitors of this period and their impressions.[2] None of these studies has been based upon the extensive collection of materials presented in this bibliography. For the period after 1800 there has been (with a few notable exceptions) a surprising neglect of many valuable materials. The writings of French travellers on the United States from 1765 to 1932 represent a rich and varied collection of materials, unknown to the general reader and largely unexploited by scholars, especially for the period of the nineteenth century.

British travellers in the United States are already familiar to the world of scholarship and to the general reading public. The fact that their works have presented no difficulties of language has made them interesting and accessible to the ordinary reader. They have long attracted the attention of American scholars with the result that the field is largely explored and exploited. Jane Louise Mesick's The English Traveller in America, 1785–1835 is a competent survey of a half-century of English observations; Allan Nevins has recently and very successfully surveyed a larger field in his American Social History as Recorded by British Travellers (New York, 1923) which presents selections, with copious introductions, from more than a score of the more important accounts. From many points of view the French travellers represent a more varied and richer source of materials. Coming from Latin rather than the familiar Anglo-Saxon backgrounds they brought a different point of view, a new approach, other biases and prejudices. The observations of many British travellers until the middle of the nineteenth century were colored by memories of the War of the American Revolution and the War of 1812. Fortunately this particular kind of asperity is gone, but it would not be impossible to find, in the twentieth century, British travellers who still regard the Americans as "colonials" and who observe them and lecture them with a marked degree of condescension. They have not, however, been able to maintain an undisputed monopoly of this point of view.

Capitaine draws his materials from eleven of the better-known travellers; these travellers represent merely a small part of the available materials.

It was enthusiasm rather than bitterness that prejudiced the minds of French travellers to America during the eighteenth century; and during the early years of the nineteenth century many of the travellers were refugees who had found an asylum in the United States and whose writings were colored by this sentiment of gratitude. America was the object of the admiration, even veneration, of French liberals during the nineteenth century, as it was the recipient of the vituperative attacks of the French Royalists. On the whole, however, the French travellers maintained a more judicious, and often sympathetic, attitude toward the United States. It was this that caused Henry T. Tuckerman to make the following comment: "The social character, the more versatile experience of American life, assimilate it in a degree, and externally, with that of France, and the climate of America develops nervous sensibility; while the exigencies of life foster an adaptive facility, which brings the Anglo-American into more intelligent relations with the Gallic nature than is possible for a people so egotistic and stolid as the English to realize. But this partial sympathy does not altogether account for the French understanding America better: that is owing to a more liberal, a less prejudiced, a more chivalric spirit; to quicker sympathies, to more scientific proclivities, to greater candor and humanity among her thinkers. They are far enough removed in life and character to catch the true moral perspective; and they have few, if any, wounds of self-love to impede their sense of justice to a country wherewith their own history is often congenially and honorably associated." [3] This was written by Tuckerman during the American Civil War and his opinion had been influenced by contemporary British criticisms of America as well as by the attitude of the French Liberals toward the Civil War.

It is interesting to contrast this view with an opinion advanced by a reviewer in Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine in 1851: "Frenchmen are very apt to express great sympathy with, and admiration of, the people of the United States. This arises from various causes. Some are smitten with their democratic institutions; some exult in American independence as a triumph over England; others assume a share in that triumph, on account of the French auxiliaries in the American war; whilst others, again, suffer their imaginations to be captivated by the wonderfully rapid rise and prodigious development of American wealth and power. It does not require any great amount of sentiment and fancy to get up this kind of love-at-a-distance." The writer then proceeds to develop the thesis that there is "a sort of disenchantment in store for those Frenchmen who, after picturing to themselves the United States as a democratic Utopia, the very paradise of the worshippers of Liberty, have occasion to visit the unseen land of their affections . . . In fact, no two characters can be more antagonistic than those of Frenchman and American. However strong his predetermination, the former finds it impossible to be pleased in the country where he had fondly anticipated so much gratification." [4]

These prejudices and preconceptions which Frenchmen have sometimes brought with them to the United States have been ably discussed by Gilbert Chinard in his study of "le mirage américain." [5] To some of these travellers the cruel deception of this "mirage" was at once apparent; an excellent example of this sudden disillusionment is found in D'Allemagne, a Parisian who in 1790 was seduced by the eloquence of a group of Scioto land speculators and who came to America to settle the lands which he had bought. This same eloquence persuaded a Parisian engineer, Desjardins, to come to America. Here he lost not only his time, money, health, and ideals, but his whole respect for humanity. In other travellers there are symptoms of a more gradual dispelling of this "mirage," but almost none has failed to note, either in simple surprise or in indignation, the discrepancy between what he thought he was about to find and what he actually found. In others this surprise has been translated into enthusiasm.[6]

Several important facts will assist in the understanding of the favorable views of the French travellers entertained by Tuckerman and other early writers on Franco-American relations. The absence of any large collections of materials in the field and the lack of any adequate bibliographical guides were distinct handicaps to any full understanding of the subject. They were forced to rely upon the better-known accounts, especially those which had been translated into English. And publishers, ever mindful of their public, have usually undertaken the translations of only the more favorable views. The result is that general readers and some scholars have been given an incomplete, and hence false, impression of the attitude of visiting Frenchmen. They have mistaken a small part of the canvas for the whole panorama. Scholars who have written on Franco-American relations have tended to minimize the numbers and the value of French views unfavorable to the United States. Indeed, a lengthy list might be drawn up of French travellers whose views were, if not distinctly hostile, decidedly uncomplimentary to the Americans.[7] The great outbursts of sympathetic enthusiasm engendered by the War of the American Revolution and the World War have each been followed by periods of relative coolness and even hostility. Especially does the present period seem melancholy and discouraging, for many of the present popular French impressions of America have been created by sensational novelists, cheap journalists and cheaper politicians whose intellectual integrity may have collapsed under the strain of ambition and the demands of their purse. At the same time intellectual relations between the two countries have increased and are increasing and there now exists a large body of French literature, serious and well-informed, on the United States. It is unfortunate that the voice of these scholars seems too often to be drowned out by the cheap clamor and the raucous din for publicity and profits.[8] But this is only a temporary condition; friendly opinions and counsels will ultimately prevail. Enough has been said to dispel the erroneous notion that French comment on the United States has been an unqualified eulogy. Frequently the hostile literature yields up to the historian some of his most valuable material. The foundations of Franco-American friendship are so broad and firm that the towering edifice will hardly be disturbed by the diatribes of designing politicians, muck-raking journalists, or dyspeptic and distempered tourists. The interesting fluctuations in French opinion of America is a subject too complicated for treatment in the present limited space and is one which I am in the course of developing elsewhere. It is impossible to characterize, with any degree of exactitude, the hundreds of French travellers who have written on America; in the editorial notes I have sometimes taken the opportunity to comment upon individual travellers.

One observation, however, should be made here. Goethe once remarked to Eckermann that the Germans were really a queer people, for "by their profound thoughts and ideas which they seek everywhere and trust, they make life much more burdensome than is necessary." French thinkers often suffer from a different virtue: French thought is often clear and very logical; it seeks the interpretive generalization as a means of simplifying life. This desire to generalize, which frequently degenerates to a mere love of the epigrammatic, often leads to curious results in the pages of those commentators who have followed de Tocqueville. Not a few critics are bold enough to attempt to superimpose a pattern of logical thought upon the changing, tumultuous life of these United States.

In the light of the materials contained in this list it must be admitted that the old generalization about the French being infrequent travellers no longer has any great degree of truth. Although accurate statistics do not exist for a detailed comparison, it is evident that the French as travellers would compare very favorably with the English. This bibliography contains more than 1,800 entries, including translations and many items of no very great significance. It contains examples of every type of traveller: soldiers and sailors, either on active service or upon missions of investigation; missionaries of religion; propagandists of French culture; merchants and land speculators of all descriptions; immigrants; refugees and exiles, fleeing the law, "leaving their country for their country's good," and escaping political vengeance; official investigators of education, industry, etc.; students; honeymooners; musicians and actresses; artists and littérateurs in search of materials; lecturers; adventurers; those who have come to seek wives; those who have married Americans; sportsmen; journalists and publicists who have been brought over by various international foundations to promote Franco-American relations; and mere tourists.

[8] For an interesting discussion of French contemporary fiction concerning the United States written by French travellers see "French Authors Take Revenge" by C. E. Andrews in The Bookman, March, 1931.

They have been in the United States for varying periods of time: Le Braz spent three days in America; Albert Delaporte remained six days; Maurice Donnay, seventeen; Georges N. Tricoche spent thirty years here. Volney wrote to La Révellière-Lépeaux in 1797: "il me semble impossible d'avoir une idée nette de ce grand pays à moins de trois ans, surtout pour un français." This was written when the United States was a small, agricultural community. Few travellers could measure up to this requirement of time, for it is certainly excessive when we consider that M. Georges Duhamel was able to write one of the most influential of contemporary books on the United States after a visit of six weeks, during much of which time he was confined to his rooms by an illness. I have sometimes indicated in the notes the length of time spent by the traveller in his observations and travels. The written records of these impressions have taken many forms: books, pamphlets, articles, letters to friends, thinly-disguised novels, official reports, published lectures, dramas (such as those of Tapon-Foujas, who suffered from a mental disorder), memoirs, journals, diaries, and poems, such as those of E. Prarond and Jacques Henri Pillionel (though these are, fortunately, rare).

The value of the materials here assembled must be studied in detail to be properly appreciated, for they enrich and embellish many fields of study. They throw an interesting light upon American social history; they provide new materials for American political and economic history.

A few of the earlier examples will illustrate this point. The anonymous account of a French traveller in the colonies in 1765 [9] presents one of the few extant reports of those who heard Patrick Henry's celebrated speech and from this report we have a new version of that famous event. Three years later John Kalb arrived in Philadelphia on a secret mission for the French government. Shortly after his arrival he made an interesting and significant prophecy. In February, 1768, he reported to Choiseul: "All classes of people here are imbued with such a spirit of independence and freedom from control, that if the provinces can be united under a common representation, an independent state will soon be formed. At all events it will certainly come forth in time." [10] Quesnay de Beaurepaire published in 1788 his project for the establishment of an Academy of Arts and Sciences at Richmond. In the following decade another French traveller, Tanguy de la Boissière, published the first journal of political economy in America, and J. P. Blanchard, the French aeronaut, accomplished the first successful aerial flight in the New World.

The materials included in this bibliography form the largest group of first-hand French observations upon America that has yet been collected. They provide a field for the study of national psychology. They are a modest contribution to the bibliography of American travel. These are new materials for the study of Franco-American relations, a field out of which have already come many brilliant and fruitful studies and a field which attracts an increasing number of scholars and students. They point to the desirability and the necessity for detailed studies of the influence of the United States in France during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. It should now no longer be possible for a scholar to write on French Political Thought in the Nineteenth Century, as did Mr. Roger Soltau (New Haven, 1931) and to dismiss the question of American influence by a few vague and often inaccurate references.

This bibliography is the result of work begun in 1929, the preparation of a volume on American social history as recorded by French travellers.[11] In the fall of that year I went to Paris to continue my researches. I soon perceived that some systematic bibliography of the subject was essential for my own work and that such a bibliography would probably prove useful to students of other fields. While there was an obvious need for bibliographical treatment of French travel in the United States, it is surprising that no serious attempts had been made to compile one. For some years the project of a vast bibliography of American travel has been agitated by a group of interested American scholars. Much progress has been made toward this end, but it has been slow, and if it is carried out along the wise and generous lines suggested by Dr. Solon J. Buck, it will be some years before the work will finally be completed.[12] Henry T. Tuckerman in his America and Her Commentators, with a Critical Sketch of Travel in the United States, devoted two chapters, with meagre bibliographical references, to French travellers and writers on the United States from the period of the Revolution to the Civil War. These chapters, containing frequent errors, discussed merely the better-known travellers and writers, often without discriminating between them. Bernard Fay in his Bibliographie critique des ouvrages français relatifs aux États-Unis, 1770–1800 (Paris, 1925) devotes his attention to the travels published during those thirty years; the present bibliography contains many new items for that period that cannot be classified as strictly travel accounts. It includes a few accounts of eighteenth-century travellers that have been discovered and published since 1800. Henry R. Wagner's The Plains and the Rockies: A Bibliography of Original Narratives of Travel and Adventure, 1800–1865 (San Francisco, 1921), admirable in plan and execution, contains numerous omissions for the period and the region which it was seemingly designed to cover. The Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris has no subject catalogue for the greater part of the period which interests us; their subject catalogue which begins in the latter part of the nineteenth century is incomplete and faulty. The Hugh C.

[11] Translated selections from forty French travellers, with an introduction and notes, probably to be published early in 1935.

[12] For an explanation of this work see "The Bibliography of American Travel: A Project" by Solon J. Buck in The Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, XXII (1928), p. 52–59. The period to be covered is from 1600 to 1900. Dr. Buck proposes that descriptive items like Bryce's American Commonwealth be included as well as the mere narrations of travels and that materials in magazines, in volumes of collections, and even in newspapers be included. He estimates that the total number of items will be about six thousand. I believe that the total number of items is seriously underestimated, especially if the bibliography is to contain newspaper materials. Dr. Chazin, upon inquiry, informs me that during a period of ten years during the nineteenth century two American correspondents of two Belgian newspapers contributed more than 500 articles. J. C. Houzeau once estimated that his newspaper contributions on America would fill twelve volumes. If I might hazard an estimate I would say that Belgian and French items alone would total more than six thousand. Dr. Buck has recently informed me that the present available funds will probably carry the work only as far as 1830.

Wallace Library, a valuable collection on Franco-American relations, was then in formation and possessed no catalogue of its treasures. The American libraries, somewhat better endowed with catalogues and bibliographical equipment, then possessed no collections of materials that approached completeness.

The bulk of the materials here presented was first gathered in Paris, where bibliographical research assumes many interesting forms. Much of the work was necessarily done in the Bibliothèque Nationale, with its challenging and baffling immensity, and in other public libraries in Paris. Not a few of the travellers' books were first discovered in the book stalls on the quays along the Seine; many were found and consulted in the collections of various Parisian booksellers whose kindness and intelligence deserve mention. They frequently threw open their collections to my examination and assisted me with a degree of affability and knowledge not so frequently found among their brethren in the United States. The Librairie Émile Nourry possesses the largest collection of travellers that I have yet found in France or in the United States; the Librairie Maurice Chamonal possesses, among other valuable items, a splendid collection of materials by and concerning Cabet and Beluze; M. Chadenat contributed largely to the building up of the splendid collection formed by the late Hugh C. Wallace under the direction of Col. Beckles Willson; M. Alph. Margraff and M. Marcel Blancheteau have been of great service in unearthing obscure items. The catalogues of various other Parisian and provincial dealers have yielded up many valuable materials. The private libraries in Paris were generously opened to me. In the library of James Hazen Hyde I found items for which I had fruitlessly searched at the Bibliothèque Nationale. The richest and most complete private library of materials on Franco-American relations was that presented to the American Embassy in Paris by the late Hugh C. Wallace. With the assistance of Col. Beckles Willson I examined each of the books and pamphlets that make up this extensive collection, now housed in the American Embassy. This collection should become, if properly augmented and administered, a center of Franco-American studies. When I returned to the United States I was able to examine the voluminous materials in the possession of The New York Public Library and the Library of Congress. The catalogues of other libraries in Europe and the United States were consulted with profit. The many writings on Franco-American relations supplied further information and suggestions. Sabin was searched item by item and Lorenz was examined for relevant material. Following the first publication of this bibliography in the Bulletin of The New York Public Library[13] much new material was contributed by several libraries and interested scholars: the Library of Congress, the William L. Clements Library, the John Carter Brown Library, M. Aegidius Fauteux, chief librarian of the Montreal Public Library, M. Fernand Baldensperger, of the Sorbonne, and Dr. Edward Larocque Tinker, whose two recent volumes are notable contributions to Franco-Americana. Since the list was first published I have been enabled to include more than two hundred new items, to add several notes, and to correct a few errors. While every effort has been made to make this list as complete as possible I fully realize that there are doubtless omissions. I shall gladly welcome further information concerning items which come within the scope of this bibliography. The success of a project of such magnitude demands the co-operation of interested scholars and librarians and I invite the active collaboration of those who are working in the field.

The materials presented many problems that demanded solutions. There were numerous anonymous books and pamphlets; I have been able to establish the authorship of several.[14] There sometimes existed a serious confusion of names that I have been able to disentangle.[15] Several of the books have been republished under various titles; others have been republished, but with the addition of new materials. I have tried to indicate these changes in the various notes. A problem that presented many difficulties was the separation of those who had actually travelled in the United States from those who merely seemed to have travelled.

Literary history contains numerous examples of authors who have written books of travel without ever having ventured beyond their local libraries. Daniel Coxe, a seventeenth-century English land speculator, wrote in his Account of New Jersey that he had "made greate discoveryes towards the greate Lake . . . and contracted Freinshipp with diverse petty Kings . . ." but we know that these events were experienced where they were written: in the quiet of his study in Aldersgate Street, London. The task of recognizing these sedentary tourists is a difficult one; nor does the evidence supplied by the text always provide a means of recognizing them. They do not directly say they have travelled in the regions which they describe, but they frequently desire (from a variety of motives) to give the impression that they are relating actual experiences and observations. In 1863 there was published in Paris a book which described the experiences of a Parisian family suddenly transported to the United States: Paris en Amérique, by Dr. René Lefebre. It was filled with humor, piquant anecdote, and sagacious observations upon American political and social life. Americans then residing in Paris took it to be the work of a Frenchman who had long resided in the United States. Beginning with the eighth edition, published early in 1864, the book carried the name of its real author, Édouard Laboulaye, a distinguished professor at the Collège de France. It was difficult to determine, in Paris in 1930, whether or not Laboulaye had ever visited the United States. There were neither bibliographical nor biographical data available; invitations were found asking Laboulaye to visit the United States and there were abundant indications that he wished to come. Obituaries revealed nothing on the question. One day, however, in the British Museum I found Mary L. Booth's English translation of his book and in the preface the brief statement that he had never been in the United States, though his knowledge of America was greater than that of any other European. His book continues to fool the unwary: as late as 1900, Edmond de Nevers speaks of Laboulaye as one of the most important of those "touristes européens lettrés qui ont traversés l'Atlantique."

[15] Such as that between the Abbé Robin and Claude C. Robin.

Even more baffling are the deliberate fabrications such as that of Price Collier. In 1897 there was published in London and New York an anonymous book, America and the Americans from a French Point of View. In the dedication the author states: "It may seem strange to the readers of some of these pages that I dedicate this little book to you, an American . . . I lay my prejudices as a Frenchman at your feet . . ." In the preface he states that he is a member of an old French family, that he has allowed these pages to be translated upon condition that his identity remain hidden; "it is enough that a Frenchman . . . writes them." It required almost two days of research, with visits to the Paris office of the London Times, to discover that this was a literary hoax. The author, although educated in Switzerland and Germany, had been born in America, had been a newspaper correspondent and had served in the United States Navy during the Spanish-American War. Fortunately the problem of M. Charles Bastide, who during 1918–19 published a series of twelve books on contemporary American civilization, was settled by a letter from the author in which he expressed his regret that he had never visited the United States.

My file of discarded items contains several hundred titles which have been examined and omitted from this bibliography because I could find no credible evidence of their actual travels in the United States. When authorities have referred to authors as travellers and I have not been able to establish the fact that they were actually in America I have frequently expressed, in the notes, doubts of their travels.

During the course of my investigations I compiled lengthy lists of French travellers in the United States who seemingly left no published records of their observations and impressions. We would be willing to give much had some of these travellers left their impressions. François Louis Michel Deforgues, French minister at New Orleans under Napoleon, might have said much concerning life in Louisiana at the beginning of the nineteenth century, but he wrote nothing during a lengthy life of considerable leisure. Louis Marie Turreau de Garambouville, who fought in the War of the American Revolution and who was French Minister to the United States from 1804 to 1811, has left no published account of the many events of which he was a close observer. The Marquis de Grouchy, who lived in America from 1815 to 1821, wrote virtually nothing on the United States, although he lived for another twenty-six years after his return to France. In the course of time it is probable that unpublished manuscripts of other French travellers will be discovered and published, especially when the French consular and diplomatic archives are further opened to investigators. The Hugh C. Wallace Collection contains a valuable manuscript of Crèvecœur which is worthy of separate publication. Manuscript letters of other travellers are probably scattered throughout various collections. An example of this is the manuscript letter of Pierre François de Réal now contained in the John Boyd Thacher Collection in the Library of Congress. The Comte de Réal lived in exile in the United States from 1816 to 1827 when he returned to Paris. Although he wrote his memoirs at length it is curious to observe that he makes no mention of the United States.

More significant then is this letter written from Le Havre May 24, 1827 and addressed to Philip Hone of New York:

> ". . . The moment I again saw this France from which I had been exiled eleven years ago my first thought, I confess, was not for my old fatherland. I turned toward the West, and, my heart filled with gratitude, I paid homage to that other country, the United States, and the State of New York especially, which so generously gave hospitality to the outcast. At this moment when I re-enter France, more than ever before, I am convinced that it is to the sole kindness, to the all-powerful intervention of the American revolution, that the victims of revolutions and counter-revolutions which stain old Europe with blood, will be obligated for their escape from that scaffold which vengeance always raises after political convulsions. Without the United States there would be no shelter for the outcast but that of prison, no repose but that of the tomb.
> "Tranquillity, happiness, liberty, independence, security: these are the words which in their full meaning and significance are thoroughly understood only in the United States, where one meets neither peasant nor pauper, where one enters without passport and leaves without permission, where one sees neither Jesuit nor gendarme, etc., etc.
> "Ah! how I am going to make haste to terminate my affairs here! How impatient am I already to return to those forests where I spent eleven years so free and independent, so tranquil and happy, or to those friends who have been so thoughtful and so indulgent to me; and especially to you, kind sir, and to your family where I was received and where my daughter was cared for with such kindness and such perfect affection . . ."

In the bibliography which follows I have endeavored to include all the French travellers who have left printed accounts of their voyages and experiences in the regions now comprised within the United States from 1765 to 1932. The year 1765 has been selected as the anterior date because at that time the movement which culminated in independence was already in motion and was being closely observed by French travellers and as early as 1768 Kalb predicted that independence was inevitable. This bibliography is an attempt to gather together all the writing on the United States by French authors who have had the opportunity of actual contact with and observation of life in its variegated aspects in America. It is not confined to the reports of the mere travels themselves, but is meant to include all writings in which the influence of their travels and observations is expressly stated or in which that influence can be definitely traced. All such materials, when they have been published in the form of books or pamphlets, including reprints from periodicals, have been sought. Purely scientific studies, such as Ferussac's Observations sur la synonymie des coquilles bivalves de l'Amérique septentrionale (Paris, 1835), have been omitted from this work, even though the researches upon which they are based might have been carried out in the United States. This list is not to be understood as being restricted to travellers who were born in France or who became French citizens. It includes those neighboring peoples who have been greatly influenced by French civilization and who use the French language: many of the Belgians and the Swiss, who are, for the present purposes, distinguishable from native Frenchmen only with considerable difficulty. It contains accounts written in French by French-Canadian travellers and by travellers from other territories essentially French in their culture. Infrequently it includes travellers of other nationalities when those travellers have originally written in French; I have tried to indicate in the notes the origins of these travellers. I have excluded authors born in the United States of French parentage; the exceptions to this exclusion are several Louisiana writers who frequently went to France and who were far more French than they were American. In the matter of Frenchmen who have migrated and settled in the United States I have fixed arbitrary limits for inclusion. If, for example, a French lad has been brought to the United States at the age of twelve, has settled down and become Americanized, and at the age of seventy has recorded his memories of an active and useful life, I have excluded that material. But, if a Frenchman has lived long enough in France to acquire a French background and a French outlook, has migrated to the United States and has written of his experiences during his early years here, I have included that material, for it usually illustrates the interplay of two cultures. I have included such material even though that particular traveller may later have become a naturalized American citizen. It is obvious that it is impossible to establish hard and fast rules for including and excluding the type of material that I have assembled in this bibliography.

No effort has been made to search through the periodicals and newspapers after 1800 to discover travellers' accounts, but for travellers who were in the United States anterior to 1800 their writings have been sought and included regardless of where those materials first found publication. Many eighteenth-century French travellers' accounts have been published in later periodicals and in the journals of learned societies; others have been utilized by various authors in books and articles, and where these latter contain extended excerpts from unpublished manuscripts of travellers they have been included.

The fact that this same procedure has not been followed for the periods after 1800 does not represent such an omission as might be supposed, for the French have long had the custom of reprinting important magazine articles in brochure form — and where these newspaper and periodical articles have formed a series they have frequently been reprinted in book form. Dr. Maurice Chazin of Columbia University has made a study of the American materials in French and Belgian periodicals of the nineteenth century; this study deserves to find its way into print at an early date, for it will notably increase our knowledge of Franco-American relations during that period.

The materials are arranged alphabetically by authors and, in the case of anonymous items, by titles, with necessary cross-references. For convenient reference each item has been numbered; "A" and "B" numbers have been provided for items which were inserted after the original numbering had been made. The great majority of the items have been seen and examined by the editor. An attempt has been made to locate copies in two American libraries. Material in The New York Public Library is indicated by the proper classmarks. I have tried to make a complete check of the materials in the Library of Congress, because their collections are large and the majority of their material is available for inter-library loan. Where the two copies have not been located in The New York Public Library and the Library of Congress I have attempted to locate copies in other American libraries. The compilation of this useful information locating copies in the various American libraries is partly the work of Daniel C. Haskell of The New York Public Library and partly the work of the staff of the Union Catalog in the Library of Congress. Before the list was first published it was checked by Mr. Haskell and after the first publication it was again checked, together with the inserted items and the Addenda, by the staff of the Union Catalog.[16] I have indicated the source of my bibliographical information for the items of which no copies have been found. When material has been found in serial publications I have given no location other than the classmark of the material in The New York Public Library. In the last analysis, of course, it is possible to tell whether or not a desired book is in a particular library only by consulting the catalogues of that library, for books are sometimes mislaid and lost and additions are constantly being made to the collections of the principal libraries.

Where possible I have attempted to include rather full bibliographical information. Since my notes on items which I examined in the Bibliothèque Nationale in the early stages of my work did not always include sufficient detailed information I have sometimes been forced to rely upon the printed catalogue of the Bibliothèque Nationale; the earlier volumes of this catalogue contain but meagre bibliographical information. Hence there is a certain paucity of details concerning some of the items not available in American libraries. At other times I have been forced to rely upon the information supplied by correspondents, and this information has varied in the degree of completeness. Many of the entries are followed by brief notes. For the better-known travellers comment was superfluous. Some items adequately describe themselves in their titles; others are described by a brief summary of their table of contents. A few of the items have required more lengthy notes. I have not attempted to list all the editions of an item unless the later editions contain revisions, new materials, or illustrations not included in the first. Although no exhaustive search has been made for translations, I have included them when found. When there are two or more entries under the same author, the items have, if possible, been arranged chronologically. Translations immediately follow the entry for the French title.

[16] This Union Catalog of the Library of Congress is an extraordinary and comparatively recent development destined to be of almost unlimited service to the world of scholarship. It contained (according to recent statistics) 13,000,000 cards from over 500 American libraries. Of these cards 8,500,000 represented the locations of more than 7,000,000 different book titles in over 500 libraries. This is not only the largest card catalogue in the world, but it is also the most complete catalogue of materials in the Library of Congress. Those who avail themselves of the services of this catalogue will be delighted, as I have been, with the cordial and intelligent co-operation extended by Dr. Ernest Kletsch, the director, and Mr. George A. Schwegmann, jr., the assistant director.

In the description of formats, difficulties arose which are still without solution. There is no uniform method of describing formats employed by the French publishers, the Bibliothèque Nationale, the British Museum, and the American libraries. The latter have recently adopted the practice of describing the size by giving the measurements in centimeters: a logical procedure, but one alien to European library methods. Frequently the same item will be described by the publishers as in one format, by the Bibliothèque Nationale as another, and by the British Museum as yet a third. Nor is it always possible to translate French terms into what seems to be their English equivalents. "In-12" cannot always be described as "12°." In the midst of this confusion I have usually given the format as described by the catalogue of the library whose copy I have consulted. I regret the necessity of this procedure, but the reader will gain from the various entries an approximate idea of the format of the various items.

A final count of the corrected bibliography[17] reveals 1,806 title entries. This includes the various editions of an item and includes the various translations that are listed. Of this total there are 267 titles that have not yet been located in any library in the United States or Canada. These titles do not seem to be available in American or Canadian libraries, but frequently the text is available in another edition or a translation. Of this total of 1,806 title entries there are 586 not yet available in The New York Public Library, but a further check reveals that the texts of 167 of these items are available in The New York Public Library in other editions, translations, and periodical form. These statistics require revision as new additions are made to the collections of the Library.

At the end of the regular list will be found a valuable Addenda. This is made up of new entries and of new information concerning items that appear in the regular list. This was made necessary by the fact that the final sheets of the earlier parts of the regular list were printed as quickly as possible. For all names and entries the Addenda should be consulted as well as the regular list. A few errors have been noted in the Corrigenda; they consist principally of minor misspellings. In the hope of facilitating the consultation of the materials contained in this bibliography I have added a selected chronological list of travellers and an index of subjects and names of persons and places. Despite their limited scope I feel they will be useful.

It is a pleasure to acknowledge the many friendly debts I have incurred during the course of my work. My special thanks are due to: The American Field Service Foundation, whose grant of a fellowship in 1929 enabled me to pursue my work in Paris; Mr. Worthington C. Ford; Col. Beckles Willson, curator of the Hugh C. Wallace Collection; Mr. James Hazen Hyde, who for more than thirty years has labored to promote Franco-American relations; Professor Bernard Faÿ of the Collège de France; MM. Chamonal, Chadenat, Blancheteau, and Clavreuïl, scholars and booksellers, of Paris; Madame Paul Vulliaud of the Librairie Émile Nourry; Dr. Maurice Chazin, whose knowledge and friendly assistance have been of constant value; Mr. Robert R. Finster, editor of publications, The New York Public Library; Mr. Daniel C. Haskell of The New York Public Library, resourceful and tireless in locating new materials as in editing and proofreading this bibliography; and to the staffs of the various libraries in Europe and America in which I have spent many pleasant hours, and without whose efforts the work of scholars would seldom reach successful conclusions. Since this bibliography first began publication in the Bulletin of The New York Public Library more than a year ago I have contracted a number of additional debts which I am happy to acknowledge: Professor Fernand Baldensperger, of the Sorbonne; M. Aegidius Fauteux, chief librarian of the Montreal Public Library; Mr. Lawrence C. Wroth, of the John Carter Brown Library; Dr. Randolph G. Adams and Miss Elizabeth B. Steere, of the William L. Clements Library; Dr. Edward Larocque Tinker, of New York City; Dr. Ernest Kletsch and Mr. George A. Schwegmann, jr., of the Union Catalog of the Library of Congress; Mr. Max J. Kohler of New York City; Mr. Nathan Shiff and Miss Naomi J. Levenson for assistance in the compilation of the index. The spirit of friendly co-operation among scholars and librarians is one of the substantial pleasures of scholarly endeavor. I take this occasion to thank in advance others who may be induced to co-operate in supplying new materials for this bibliography or in pointing out errors that it may contain. I owe, as do other workers in the field, a special debt of gratitude to The New York Public Library for this opportunity of publication and for the intelligence and liberality with which it has seen fit to augment its collection of the writings of French travellers in the United States.

To my wife, who has tolerated and encouraged this innocuous form of bibliomania, I offer this bibliography as an apology for many silent hours.

Achard, Paul.

Un œil neuf sur l'Amérique. Illustrations de D. Olère. Paris: Les Lettres Françaises, 1930. 285 p. in-8. 3

Copies: NYPL (ILH); LC; BN.

A new slant on America, "Un œil neuf sur l'Amérique," being a translation by Margaret Gaffey Mel . . . Chicago: Rand, McNally & Company, 1931. 203 p. illus. 8°. 4

Achard in the company of six other young French journalists made a flying visit to the United States in October, 1929. He saw New York, Hollywood, Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. He visited a football game, several great hotels, and Harlem. His book is hasty, fragmentary, enthusiastic, and uncritical and contains no "new slants" upon anything American.

Copies: NYPL (ILH); LC.

Adam, Lucien.

De l'abolition de l'esclavage aux États-Unis. Nancy: Imprimerie de Vagner, 1861. 72 p. in-4. 4A

The author made two "voyages volontaires" in the United States before writing this pamphlet.

Copy: BN.

Adam, Paul Auguste Marie.

Vues d'Amérique, ou La Nouvelle Jouvence. Paris: Ollendorff, 1906. 568 p. in-18. 5

This popular French novelist visited the United States in 1904; the resulting lengthy volume is among the most important French writings upon twentieth-century America.

Aimard, Gustave, pseud. of Olivier Gloux.

Gustave Aimard was the pen name of Olivier Gloux (1818–1883), who is usually referred to as Aimard. He was a prolific author whose works attained such popularity in France, England, and the United States that he became more than a mere author and rose to the dimensions of an industry. He was known as the French Fenimore Cooper; certainly he deserves a high place among the imitators of Cooper. He spent long periods in North and South America, periods which are said to total more than twenty years. He visited Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, California, Texas and possibly other regions which are now part of the United States. His first visit to the United States was from 1835 to 1845; he returned again about 1850.

Through his many volumes he managed to convey to the Old World a considerable knowledge of Indian customs and of life on the frontier. What modern literary research has been devoted to Aimard (and that has not been much) reveals him to have had a surprising knowledge of life and customs in the Southwest. His novels can, with certain reservations, be taken to accurately portray certain aspects of pioneer and frontier life. Aimard's views on the United States were most interesting: he saw in America the land of liberty and theoretical philanthropy, a land where the people had one God, the God Dollar. He early accused the Americans of imperialist designs, designs that would bring the entire continent under American domination. The usual conclusion of travellers: that we were insufferable puritans — did not escape him. The greatest virtue of the Americans was their conquering energy that was transforming a continent. Virgil L. Jones has written in the Southwestern Review (xv, 1930, p. 452–68) a study of Aimard.

The list that follows is, I believe, the first attempt to compile a bibliography of Aimard's writings touching the regions now a part of the United States. The total of his various writings is large: the NYPL catalogue lists more than 70 titles; the new catalogue of the BM contains more than 175 entries; the catalogue of the BN lists 238 entries. Both the collections of the BM and the BN have important omissions; nor can a complete bibliography be compiled from all these collections. In the following list the original French editions are arranged chronologically; each original edition is followed by translations, chiefly drawn from the collection of the NYPL. At the end of the list will be found several translations for which I have been unable to find the French originals, together with the several books in which Aimard collaborated with J. B. d'Auriac. Aimard frequently borrowed materials from one book to fill another. For a more complete view of Aimard's productions consult the catalogues of the above-mentioned libraries.

Nouvelles du Scioto, ou Relation fidele du voyage et des infortunes d'un Parisien qui arrive de ce pays-là, où il étoit allé pour s'établir. Paris: Chez Lenoir et Leboucher, Aoust 1790. 16 p. in-8. 87
The author was twenty years old when he first became enchanted by the advertisements of the Scioto Land Company. With a large number of emigrants he sailed from Le Havre in February, 1790. Early in May they arrived in Chesapeake Bay, but after a most miserable crossing. In Alexandria they found neither food nor drink — nor the agents of the Scioto enterprise, whom they expected to meet there. Two members of the group sent to New York did not return; the others considered travelling to Scioto, but were deterred by the stories of vast deserts, of savage Indians, of "ferocious beasts, tigers, bears, and flying serpents" that infested the region. They determined to return to France; the greater part of the group were forced to remain in Virginia, the others reached Paris in July, and were cured of "la folie de Scioto."

ALMBERT, ALFRED D'.

Flânerie parisienne aux États-Unis. Paris: Librairie Théâtrale, 1856. 279 p. in-12. 88
The author almost perished of seasickness and his eloquent denunciation of the sea as a highway of travel is a prelude to a generally ill-humored attack. The more important chapters treat: temperance in Maine, slavery and the Blacks, gallantry in America, flirtation, fine arts in America, social positions, cemeteries, William Penn, and Stephen Girard. In a chapter of concluding advice to his countrymen he advocates the criminal prosecution of all authors who contribute to the legend of a rich, democratic, and happy America.

AMPÈRE, JEAN JACQUES ANTOINE.

Promenade en Amérique: États-Unis, Cuba, Mexique. Paris: Michel Lévy frères, 1855. 2 v. xii, 417; 425 p. in-8. 93
Ampère was the son of the distinguished scientist and held a professorship of literature at the Collège de France. He first conceived the idea of visiting America from meeting Fanny Kemble. He found in America the materials to justify and support the theories of his intimate friend, de Tocqueville, to whom he dedicated the two volumes. His observations are intelligent, sometimes shrewd, and often witty. He met the most distinguished American scientists, publicists, and authors, but his travels were confined to the northeastern states. He was so fascinated by the beauty of the American cemeteries that he wished to die and be buried in one, preferably at Mount Auburn, Mass. On second thought he states that he would prefer being at Cambridge and getting a professorship there. The lyric advertisements of the pork industry in Cincinnati reminded him of the poetry of Dante.

ASSOLLANT, JEAN BAPTISTE ALFRED.

Scènes de la vie des États-Unis: Acacia. Les Butterfly. Une fantaisie américaine. Paris: Hachette, 1859. 362 p., 1 l. in-18. 107

The author chose to convey his impressions of American life in a series of short stories, of which the actual plots are of little consequence. He was a liberal with republican sentiments, and, although his comments are often incisive and severe, he was sympathetic to the American experiment. Kentucky is the background of Acacia; New York and the Scioto lands, of Les Butterfly; and Baltimore of Une fantaisie américaine, an amusing burlesque of social life in that city.

AUDOUARD, MME. OLYMPE (JOUVAL).

A travers l'Amérique. Le Far-West. Paris: E. Dentu, 1869. 370 p. in-18. 116

The author complains that too many French writers have described the ideal American republic and not the real one, and states that if one comes to America expecting much he will find nothing; if he expects nothing, he will find a little. She was a republican before visiting America, but as a result of her observations she concluded that such a form of government would never do for France. Petty annoyances colored her opinions of American social life: she states that the most conspicuous thing about a Yankee is the soles of his feet; that the Yankee expectorates once a minute — and is the champion of the world. American men seemed odious to her; American women, exactly opposite. She praised American railways, declaring that the Pacific Railroad was one of the few great achievements of the century.

AUGER, ÉDOUARD.

Voyage en Californie (1852–1853). Paris: Hachette, 1854. 238 p. in-16. 118

The author states that he went to California from simple curiosity and a love of travel, and not to seek gold. He studied the mines, the miners, and the Indians. He found thousands of Frenchmen who were stranded in California. The religious revivals which he witnessed he thought were worthy of the middle ages. Lauds the generous and noble instincts of the Americans.

M. Baldensperger, professor at the Sorbonne and a corresponding member of the Institut, is co-director of the Revue de littérature comparée. He has frequently been in the United States, where he has held appointments at Harvard and at Columbia University. He has written widely and brilliantly upon literary history and literature and has been one of the most active of a small group of distinguished scholars who have established the study of comparative literature. For his reviews and articles upon American literature and Franco-American relations, as well as his impressions of America and Americans, see the recent bibliography, Publications de M. Fernand Baldensperger . . ., Paris, 1930 (reprinted from Mélanges . . . offerts à Fernand Baldensperger, Paris, 1930, tome 2, p. 373–94, in which form the material is available in NYPL).

Paul Joseph Guérard de Nancrède is thought to have been an officer in Rochambeau's army; he taught French at Harvard beginning in 1787. He wrote his L'Abeille française for his Harvard students in 1792. While in Boston he founded a bookstore and a newspaper, Le Courrier de Boston, which he continued for seven months. He later moved to Philadelphia.

NOUVEAU
L'AMÉRIQUE SEPTENTRIONALE,
EN L'ANNÉE 1781;
ET
DE L'ARMÉE
DE M. LE COMTE DE ROCHAMBEAU.

Par M. l'Abbé ROBIN.

A PHILADELPHIE,
Et se trouve à PARIS,
Chez MOUTARD, Imprimeur-Libraire de la REINE, de MADAME, & de Madame Comtesse d'ARTOIS, rue des Mathurins, Hôtel de Cluni.

M. DCC. LXXXII.

One of the earliest books of French travel in America during the Revolution.

Il a fui l'âge heureux où d'illustres Guerriers,
Aux pieds de Jupiter, déposant ces lauriers,
Dont les moissons courboient leurs têtes glorieuses,
Retournoient habiter de rustiques foyers;
Le chaume alors cachoit des âmes généreuses.
Ce fut la pauvreté qui forma les Héros.
Ton faste te flétrit, ma pauvreté m'honore;
Dans mon réduit champêtre habite le repos;
Sous tes lambris dorés la crainte te dévore.
Que Tyr sur tes habits étalant ses couleurs,
Prête à ta vanité sa brillante imposture;
L'art menteur est pour toi : pour moi j'ai la nature;
C'est pour moi que sa main a coloré ces fleurs,
Qu'elle rend à ces bois leur verte chevelure,
Qu'elle émaille ces bords baignés d'une onde pure....
Ta table est d'alimens surchargée à grands frais,
Pour aiguiser ton goût qu'émousse l'abondance;
Une faim salutaire assaisonne les mets
Que la frugalité vient m'offrir sans apprêts,
Et je brave l'orgueil de ta riche indigence.

(Par M. Gautier.)

LETTRE écrite à M. Garat, par un Officier récemment arrivé d'Amérique.

MONSIEUR,

ACCOUTUMÉ, pendant une longue absence, à n'avoir d'autre connoissance des nouvelles productions de notre Littérature, que celles que je puisois dans les Ouvrages périodiques dont je pouvois me procurer la lecture, j'ai toujours été avide du Journal auquel vous travaillez, & sur-tout de ces articles intéressans, où l'on reconnoîtroit aisément votre cachet quand vous n'y mettriez pas votre nom. Celui que vous venez d'insérer dans le Mercure du premier Mars avoit encore un autre droit à mon attention. Il traite un sujet qui m'intéresse personnellement par le long séjour que j'ai fait en Amérique, & par les sentimens qui m'attachent à une Nation beaucoup plus célèbre en Europe qu'elle n'y est encore connue & appréciée. Cette célébrité seule exige qu'on l'étudie avec application, & qu'on en parle avec circonspection; mais les liens solides & durables qui nous unissent avec elle en font un devoir plus cher & plus sacré. Les Militaires, tant de terre que de mer ont été assez heureux pour détruire en Amérique cette opinion de notre légèreté nationale, qui peut-être subsiste encore en Europe; nos Ecrivains seroient ils plus indisciplinables que nos Guerriers? Le premier Ouvrage françois où l'on traite des mœurs, des loix, du climat, de l'agriculture, des productions de l'Amérique, &c. &c. a été écrit par un homme qui n'entendoit pas la langue du pays, qui n'y a passé que quatre mois, & qui ne s'est jamais arrêté huit jours dans une Ville. Je ne prétends ni juger ni examiner l'Ouvrage de M. l'Abbé Robin, que je ne connois encore que par votre Extrait. On dit qu'il est écrit agréablement; c'est un mérite, s'il est exact; c'est un inconvénient s'il ne l'est pas. Mais dans tous les cas il est du devoir d'un homme plus instruit de relever les erreurs qui peuvent s'y trouver. Je ne parlerai que de celles dont l'analyse que vous en avez faite m'a donné connoissance; & comme je n'ai pas le loisir de me livrer à la discussion, je vous demanderai la liberté de m'y opposer que des assertions contraires,

First page of a trenchant criticism of the opinions of the Abbé Robin, written by a French officer recently returned from America. From the Mercure de France, March 29, 1783.

Rachel and the new world; a trip to the United States and Cuba... New York: Dix, Edwards & Co., 1856. 2 p.l., (i)iv–xiv, 404 p. 12°. 169

Rachel Félix, the French actress, went on an English and American tour under the management of her brother, Raphael Félix. Her French Company was well attended in America, but not well appreciated. New York is described as a very sad city and Boston, where her success was greater, as literary and cultured. Fires seemed to be one of the chief American amusements and firemen were always on some kind of exhibition.

BELLEGARRIGUE, A.

Les femmes d'Amérique. Paris: Blanchard, 1853. 96 p. in-16. 173

The modesty of American women has become vanity and their tenderness cupidity. For an European family life does not exist in America, for here the family has lost all authority. Marriage and divorce are simple and frequent. In the United States female education is founded on an exact knowledge of things, in decided contrast to that in Europe. The European woman has an exalted imagination: she loves the ideal man and lives in a fictive world. The American woman is a realist and not a poetess; she expects nothing very marvelous from a man. In countries that live by illusions poets succeed because they have most illusions, but in the United States it is the mathematicians who ought to succeed.

BERNARD, SIMON. 200

Simon Bernard, French general and military engineer, was exiled and came to the United States in 1816, where he became a brigadier-general in the American army. He was in charge of planning an extensive system of coast defenses, in which he was eminently successful. Fort Monroe in Virginia was designed by Simon. With the accession of Louis Philippe he returned to France. It is to be regretted that he did not find the time to write on American conditions; he was endowed with great intelligence and an agreeable style. See his letter on American conditions dated from New York April 15, 1818 and addressed to M. Huart, p. 199–202 of Georges Bertin, Joseph Bonaparte en Amérique.

Mémoires d'un Mormon. Paris: E. Jung [1862]. 329 p. in-18. 212
This is the first book by a French Mormon. The author combines the history of Joseph Smith with his own experiences in Utah. He became an ardent propagandist of the faith in France, where he translated many Mormon documents into French. Previous to his conversion in 1850 he had spent seven years in the New World and had returned to Paris where he became editor of the Populaire. A Mormon missionary visited him in Paris and converted him; with four other converts he was baptised on Dec. 1, 1850. After this he left his wife in Paris and went to live for four years in Utah.

BIARNÈS, ADOLPHE.

Le droit des gens: La France et les Yankees. Nantes: Imprimerie de Plédran, 1866. 98 p. in-8. 214
Biarnès states that he can tell the truth about the United States, because he expects neither honors, gifts, nor favors there. He lived in the South for ten years. When he went to the United States he was a republican; he is still a slavery man. His entire attitude is colored by the American attitude toward French intervention in Mexico and he warns Mr. Seward that Napoleon III will spank him, if he does not mend his ways. Mexico is the Poland of the new world, states the author, and the United States is the Russia that first disorganizes and then conquers. He hopes that the South will again rise up and triumph against the North. The cause of all the troubles in the South came with the arrival of the Abolitionists, wretched sentimentalists. All the wicked and corrupt people in the States united against the honest minority and became Abolitionists. From the immense confidence of the Americans comes an energy that nothing can stop. American education makes counterfeits of Plutarch's heroes. Everything in America runs to an excessive individualism. Education is often a bad thing for a nation; fortunately the French have been able to get along quite well merely by instinct.

BLANCHARD, JEAN PIERRE.

Journal of my forty-fifth ascension, being the first performed in America, on the ninth of January, 1793. Æthereum tranabit iter, quo numine Blanchard? Impavidus, sortem non timet Icarium. Philadelphia: Printed by Charles Cist, 1793. 27 p., 1 pl. 8°. 243A

Reissued in 1918 as Extra number 64, [part 1], of the Magazine of history with notes and queries.

This is undoubtedly one of the most curious and interesting items of travel in the United States. It is the narrative of the first successful aërial flight in America. The author was a Frenchman who had made many successful ascensions in various European cities and who was the first to cross the English Channel by air from France to England. In his ascension from Philadelphia he flew a distance of about fifteen miles in little more than forty minutes. It is worthy of note that the first person to accomplish an aërial flight in America was equipped with a passport from President Washington, who displayed great interest in the experiment.

It would seem that there were three editions of this pamphlet published during 1793. Evans states that there was a French edition, but locates no copy. The reprint of the pamphlet in the Magazine of history quotes verse from an earlier and less complete edition in English.

BOSSANGE, HECTOR.

Ma bibliothèque française. Paris: H. Bossange et fils, 1855. 481 p. in-16. 260

Bossange was a Parisian bookseller who frequently visited the United States. In the introduction to this volume he states that he is favorably impressed with cultural activities in America; that libraries are everywhere being formed; and that all contain French books. The French impression that all Americans are merchants is explained by the fact that almost all Frenchmen who come to America come on business. In his opinion France is much better understood in America than is America in France.

BOSSU, NICOLAS.

Bossu served as a soldier with the comte de Schonberg in many parts of Europe; he fought in the wars in Italy and distinguished himself at the battle of Château-Dauphin, July 19, 1744, where he was seriously wounded. For almost ten years he was stationed with the French army in Louisiana, where he had much time to explore and observe. He first sailed from La Rochelle December 26, 1750, for the new world and did not arrive back in France until June 15, 1757. He returned to America a second time, arriving at New Orleans August 12, 1758 and not returning to France until late in 1762; he had landed in Spain November 1 of that year. His third voyage was a private enterprise; he arrived in New Orleans at the end of May, 1770 and had returned to Bordeaux by August, 1771. The importance of his voyages has long been recognized.

BOUCARD, A.

Travels of a naturalist. A record of adventures, discoveries, history and customs of Americans and Indians, habits and descriptions of animals, chiefly made in North America, California, Mexico, Central America, Columbia, Chili, etc. during the last forty-two years. By A. Boucard, naturalist. London: [Printed at Bournemouth by Purdy & Son,] 1894. viii, ii, 204 p., 1 port. 8°. 267A

Copies: NYPL (HAY); LC.

Boucard was a Frenchman who spent many years in England and who wrote with equal facility in both French and English. This interesting volume of reminiscences was privately published in English in London; I can find no evidence that there was a French edition. He first visited San Francisco in 1851, and of this visit he has left a lengthy description. During 1853 and 1854 he lived in New York City. He made several other voyages to the United States, the last in 1876.

When M. Bourget first came to the United States in the summer of 1893 he had already achieved considerable reputation as a novelist. He remained in America almost a year while travelling throughout the country. He was a guest in many distinguished houses; he knew many prominent Americans, among whom was James Gordon Bennett, owner of the New York Herald. Bourget's impressions of America were first published in English from Sept. 23, 1894 to Feb. 17, 1895. Before their publication was ended they were attacked bitterly by Mark Twain in the January, 1895, number of the North American review. The controversy thus begun was ended by an article of Max O'Rell in the March number of the North American review.

CARLIER, AUGUSTE.

Visited the United States from 1855 to 1857. He travelled extensively in America where he enjoyed the friendship of many distinguished Americans of the period. Carlier was a member of the American Philosophical Society. While in the United States he kept a detailed diary which, still in manuscript form, richly deserves publication.

De l'esclavage dans ses rapports avec l'union américaine. Paris: Michel Lévy frères, 1862. xv, 495 p. 8°. 353

Here Carlier maintains that all French ideas of America have been turned a bit from reality by de Tocqueville, who represented the United States as a political Eldorado. This is a statement that could hardly have been made two years earlier. There are great things which France does not know about the United States; these things they are now learning. In Carlier's opinion there was an excellent argument to be advanced for the separation of the North and the South. He clearly understood that the emancipation of the slaves was not a solution of the problem of the negroes, but that it merely changed its aspect. Once they were freed there must be a method of saving them.

This was published posthumously with an introductory memoir on Carlier written by Claudio Jannet, who completed several chapters left unfinished at the time of the author's death. This history was the chief concern of Carlier for the last twenty years of his life.

Carlier states that among modern nations the Americans are the people best placed and in the most favorable circumstances to exert a great influence on the future of the world. America is a vast field of study for the philosopher, the economist, the historian. He is able to give important modifications upon de Tocqueville's ideas on the family and marriage in America.

CARREY, ÉMILE.

Grandeur et avenir des États-Unis. Paris: Dentu, 1863. 48 p. in-8. 360

In this sympathetic pamphlet the author states that there is not a day but one hears, no matter where he is, some disparagement of the United States. It is the fashion to blame them for something. It is the fashion to regard them as a troop of pirates who do nothing but go bankrupt, travel on steamboats, and fight with revolvers in the streets. In his opinion the more one studies the Americans the more one is impressed with their qualities, their real grandeur, and their great future. Carrey found that generosity was the base of American character. Everywhere he found literacy, knowledge and equality. And in America he witnessed a great sympathy for France.

CARTIER DE MARCHIENNE, O. DE.

Mes voyages. Paris: P. Dupont, 1897. 367 p. in-18. portrait. 361

p. 247–305 are devoted to America.

The author, a Belgian, was an inveterate traveller. He was attracted to the United States by the great Chicago Exposition of 1893. He arrived in the United States in May, 1893, and left in July of the same year. Although he shook the hand of President Cleveland he was not favorably impressed by the people in America, for he found them all oppressed by the terrific struggle for life, and turned with pleasure to meditating how sweet and deep must be the sleep in an American cemetery.

Both volumes are diverting and amusing and have had a wide reading. The author first discovered America by marrying a wealthy American heiress; divorce forced him to cultivate that "art" (of which both these volumes are seemingly a part) which he describes in his second volume.

CESTRE, CHARLES.

Professor Cestre, one of the best-known French authorities on American affairs, holds the chair of American Literature and Civilization at the Sorbonne. His pamphlet on Harvard University, a lecture in printed form, written while he was an instructor at the University of Dijon, attracted wide attention and comment at the time of its publication. He had just returned from two years of graduate work at Harvard; he was the first French student to complete his graduate studies in English in an American university. Following his return to France he lectured and wrote extensively, especially in La Revue de l'enseignement supérieur, on American universities. When the chair of American studies was established at the Sorbonne in 1918 he was the logical candidate for the post, which he has held since that time. For the other writings of Professor Cestre, not contained in this bibliography, see the catalogue of the NYPL.

The NYPL copy has a mutilated title-page; the imprint is wanting. This copy belonged to the Marquise de Marbois — neé Elizabeth Moore — and contains her signature. The Harvard Library copy, of which the title-page is reproduced elsewhere in this bibliography, has an added interest because it was presented by Édouard Laboulaye to Charles Sumner. This title is one of the rarest items of Franco-Americana. It was printed on the press of the French fleet at Newport in an edition of from 24 to 27 copies to save the trouble of making manuscript copies which Chastellux wished to circulate among his friends in Europe.

CHATEAUBRIAND, FRANÇOIS AUGUST RENÉ, VICOMTE DE.

For the interesting and highly-complicated questions, both historical and literary, concerning Chateaubriand's visit to America see under Kate Emma Armstrong, Gilbert Chinard, and Fernand Baldensperger, the most recent and competent authorities. Victor Giraud and Joseph Bédier have also made important contributions to the study of the early career of Chateaubriand.

The narrative of his travels is found in his Voyage en Amérique (1826) and in the first volume of his Mémoires d'Outre-Tombe (1849). But the "nouvelle muse" which he found in America, instead of the Northwest Passage, provided the inspiration for Atala (1801), René (1805), and Les Natchez (written about 1797, published in 1826).

Any detailed bibliography of Chateaubriand's writings would approach the size of a small volume. An adequate and convenient bibliography is supplied by the printed catalogue of the BN which contains some 713 entries. The items listed below are composed chiefly of a few interesting editions of his writings on America and other writings in which the influence of his American experience is most marked. For a more complete idea of the collections of the NYPL on this subject consult the card catalogues.

CHEVALIER, HENRI ÉMILE.

Chevalier lived in the United States and Canada from 1850 until March, 1860, when he returned to France to recuperate from an illness caused by overwork. His ten years in America were filled with activity. He was a novelist, journalist, translator, geographer, geologist, historian, and tourist. He was one of the editors of the Courrier des États-Unis at New York and was a correspondent of l'Orléanis at New Orleans. In these two papers many of his novels received their first publication. While in America he is said to have published more than twenty volumes, among which were La Vie à New-York in six volumes and Les Déserts de l'Amérique septentrionale in two volumes. Sabin locates no copies of these works, nor have I been able to locate copies or even definite bibliographical information concerning them. Dionne in his Canadian bibliography does not mention the works of Chevalier that are reported to have been published at Montreal.

CHEVALIER, MICHEL.

Chevalier (1806–1879), celebrated French economist, was an important follower of Saint Simon, the founder of modern socialism. He became active in the movement and in 1830 became editor of Le Globe, a Parisian daily newspaper. When the school at Ménilmontant was broken up by the authorities he was sentenced by a French court to six months' imprisonment. M. Thiers, under the advice of Legrand, sent him to the United States to study railroads. He arrived in America in December, 1833, and remained until October, 1835. America charmed him from the day of his arrival. "La vie en France est une perpétuelle station — ici c'est un voyage perpétuel." Here he found a new world, where the past had not yet imposed an oppressive routine and where there were no great privileges of birth. His letters addressed to the Journal des Débats were very successful and established his reputation. These letters were republished and form about a third of the text of Les Lettres sur l'Amérique du Nord. During his lengthy career as publicist and professor he was constantly occupied in promoting the relations between France and the United States. Among his contemporaries he enjoyed a reputation equal to that of his two distinguished contemporaries, de Tocqueville

CHINARD, GILBERT.

The study of Franco-American relations is indebted to no one scholar more than to Gilbert Chinard, professor of French Literature at Johns Hopkins University. His editorial labors have made available to the world of scholarship many unpublished manuscripts of Volney, Du Pont de Nemours, La Fayette, and Jefferson. His original contributions first opened up the field for the study of "l'exotisme américain" in French literature from the sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries. His recent activities include a biography of Thomas Jefferson and a forthcoming study of John Adams.

Les CITOYENS francois habitans des Etats-unis de L'Amérique Septentrionale, à leur patrie, à ses Réprésentans. 17 p. 8°. 447A

This uncommon pamphlet, which has neither publisher, printer, place nor date of publication was doubtless printed in the latter part of 1793 or the beginning of 1794. It is primarily a complaint, eloquently bitter, against certain French consuls, among them d'Annery, for their anti-republican conduct toward the privateer La Marseilloise in Boston. "Citoyens, La République salaire un nombre de Consuls en Amérique; c'est autant de serpens que la révolution avoit engourdis, et que la République réchauffe dans son sein..."

COLLOT, VICTOR.

General Collot was a French officer who had served with Rochambeau during the American revolutionary war. In 1796 he undertook, at the request of Adet, the French ambassador to the United States, to furnish a detailed memoir on the western regions of the United States, the Ohio and Mississippi valleys. His voyage from Pittsburgh to New Orleans required from March to December, 1796. He died in 1805 and his manuscript remained unpublished until 1826. From the unusual copy in the NYPL it will be seen that the Voyage was printed, but not published, in 1804.

CONSIDÉRANT, VICTOR PROSPER.

Considérant (1808–1893) at the age of twenty-one adopted the very unpopular communistic doctrines of Fourier, at whose death in 1837, he became the cbief of the movenient. He was the real founder of the cooperative movement in France. Accused of treason, he fled to Belgium in 1849 and came to New York in 1852. There he received tbe support of Albert Brisbane and made a journey to Texas. His highly enthusiastic account of that territory, Au Texas, published in many editions, received wide attention. He formed a company and in 1855 settled at Reunion, several miles from Dallas. After several years it failed, and Considérant settled in San Antonio, returning to Paris in 1869, and dying obscurely in 1893.

CRÈVECŒUR, MICHEL GUILLAUME ST. JEAN DE.

Crèvecœur first came to New York in 1759, where six years later he became a naturalized American citizen. His Letters from an American Farmer, one of the popular and influential books of the eighteenth century, was probably written between 1769 and 1780, when he returned to France. In 1783 he returned to the United States, when he became the French consul at New York. He remained there until 1790, when he returned to France for the last time. For a brief and convenient bibliography see the Dictionary of American Biography, IV, 544. The Hugh C. Wallace Library contains a lengthy unpublished manuscript of Crèvecœur which merits publication.

Letters from an American Farmer, describing certain provincial situations, manners and customs not generally known and conveying some idea of the late and present interior circumstances of the British Colonies in North America, written for the information of a friend in England, by J. Hector St. Jean. London: T. Davies, 1782. 318 p. in-8; map. 497

L'Amérique au XVIIIe siècle, vue par un Français. Édité par Bernard Faÿ. (La Vie des peuples. Paris, 1922. 4°. v. 7, p. 399–425.) 549

Desjardins was a middle-class Parisian engineer who was sent to America to represent a land company organized by Gouverneur Morris. He states without reserve his failures and his disillusionments. Instead of the America that he expected: pure, charitable, friendly and in a state of nature, he found merely a country corrupt, unworthy of its great reputation for morality, selfish and hostile to foreigners. As M. Faÿ concludes: "He lost his time, his hopes, his ideals, his money, his health, and his respect for humanity."

DIALOGUE entre Deux Mondes: reportage. Par Gérard de Catalogne. Paris: Librairie de la Revue française [Alexis Rédier], [1931]. 298 p. 12°. 553

This book contains the results of an important symposium conducted by M. Gérard de Catalogne in the Parisian newspaper, Le Figaro. It should not be neglected by any one interested in Franco-American relations — or by any student of public opinion. It is a curious medley — and a revealing document. Here sober professors and members of the Institute are jostled by cheap journalists and gullible sensation-mongers. As an example of this latter I translate this pasty gem, culled from the remarks of one René Maran: "They [the Americans] love garbage and garbage surrounds them, especially when they wallow in the delights of cocktails i. e. mouth wash, Cologne water, wood alcohol, spirits of paregoric are mixed with several dashes of angustora drops, vitriol or with several portions of eau de Javel [a strong French deodorant and disinfectant]". It is interesting to note that the author of this has never been in the United States, so that his imagination is in no way hampered by the facts.

Many French authors and publicists who have travelled in the United States have participated in this debate for and against "l'Américanisme." A list of these travellers, with the pages containing their contributions, follows:

Bellegarde, Dantes.	p. 83–88.
Danel, Herman.	p. 139–145.
Dimnet, Ernest.	p. 146–149.
Duplan, J. L.	p. 149–152.
Durtain, Luc.	p. 192–195.
Fleury, Jean Gérard.	p. 154–157.
Homberg, Octave.	p. 102–107.
Lalou, René.	p. 107–110.
Melera, Marguerite Y.	p. 128–131.
Morand, Paul.	p. 167–168.
Puaux, René.	p. 224–228.
Reboux, Paul.	p. 235–237.
Roz, Firmin.	p. 244–249.
Siegfried, André.	p. 252–254.

Of these fourteen travellers who have had the opportunity of observing America and the Americans for themselves it is relevant to note that four, Bellegarde, Homberg, Lalou and Melera, argue against "l'Américanisme"; the other ten write in favor of it.

DU BUYSSON.

Memoir by one of the French officers who accompanied the Marquis de Lafayette to America and Extract of the letter which accompanied the Memoir. 12 September [1777]. (B. F. Stevens's Facsimiles..., v. 8, no. 754.) 580G

The French original occupies eight folio pages; the translation eleven folio pages. The Memoir is a most interesting and valuable account of his experiences and observations in America, from the time of his landing to the eve of his departure. He speculates upon the real causes of the war and describes the state of the American army, the Quakers, and pays great attention to the prevalence of luxury in America.

DUCHER, G. J. A.

Ducher came to the United States after the close of the American Revolution and was given an appointment as vice-consul at Portsmouth, N. H. In the summer of 1787 he was transferred to Wilmington, N. C., where he remained until late in 1789, when he returned to France. An exhaustive study of Ducher has been written by Frederick L. Nussbaum [q.v.]. After returning to France Ducher wrote several pamphlets touching upon the United States and American affairs; he also wrote a number of articles on the United States for Le Moniteur, and these are carefully listed by Nussbaum, p. 322–328.

Longview is in Cowlitz County, Washington, on the north bank of the Columbia River about half way between Portland and the sea. It has a population of about 10,000 and was built by the Long-Bell Lumber Co., as a lumber center. Here the author was fascinated by the rapid growth of a small city. It is noteworthy as one of the few items of M. Durtain in which he is not chiefly interested in American crime and sex.

Du Simitière, artist, antiquary, and naturalist, projector of the first American museum, with some extracts from his note book, by William John Potts. (Pennsylvania magazine of history and biography. Philadelphia, 1889. 8°. v. 13, p. 341–375.) 622A

Du Simitière was a Swiss artist and antiquary who first came to America in 1765. In 1769, in New York, he became a naturalized citizen, but this he denied in 1777 when he was in danger of being drafted into the militia. At that time he stated that he was a foreigner who was travelling in the United States to complete his studies and his collections. At his death his vast collection of newspapers and pamphlets was bought by the Library Company of Philadelphia. The extracts from his note book extend from 1774 to 1783.

It is strange that this book has never been translated into English, for it is the single work which offers the most complete picture of American life written by any French traveller during the period of the Civil War. The author was endowed with a penetrating observation and a felicitous style. He arrived in the United States in June, 1864, during a critical period of the war, and remained until February, 1865, when the victory of the North was certain. During that time he travelled extensively: from Quebec to Georgia and from Boston to Missouri. His two volumes of more than nine hundred pages are composed of his observations written day by day. He is equally successful whether describing the color and bitterness of an electoral campaign, a New Year's celebration in New York, or the cultural atmosphere of Boston. He has painted an excellent picture of Washington during the war. Among his many interesting pages will be found valuable materials on Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Washington, Chicago, Missouri, and Kentucky.

This comes in the class of cheap and sensational fiction. Its action takes place in a New York speakeasy with frequent descriptions of the life of several of its characters in Hollywood. Deux emigrés en Amérique: Talleyrand et Beaumez. (La Révolution française. Paris, 1926. 8°. v. 79, p. 51–61.) 645

The author has made extensive use of unpublished documents from the Knox mss. in the Massachusetts Historical Society and from the private archives of Van Eeghen and Co. of Amsterdam. It is to be noted that Evans adopts the form "Beaumez" rather than the more usual "Beaumetz," since that was the form used by Beaumez in signing his letters.

EYMA, LOUIS XAVIER.

Eyma, several of whose works were published under the name of Adolphe Ricard, was born in Martinique in 1816 and died sixty years later in Paris. He was probably sent to Paris for his education. He became associated with the Ministry of Marine there and wrote for French reviews. In 1845 he first visited the United States to study the American educational system. He later returned to the United States and went to New Orleans where he edited the French section of L'Abeille during 1858–9. He travelled extensively in America before returning to Paris. (See Edward L. Tinker, Les Écrits de la langue française en Louisiane au XIXe siècle, p. 189.)

Eyma was a prolific journalist and littérateur whose writings during the 1850's and 1860's were influential in the formation of French opinion of the United States. Despite the volume of his writings on America the social historian will find them of considerable value.

Excentricités américaines. Paris: Michel Lévy frères, 1860. 199 p. in-24. 653

The author explains that in his other books on America he has discussed the greatness, the richness and strength of American civilization and that he does not wish this book to appear to be a contradiction of his others, for here he paints merely the peculiarities. Other French writers have spent much of their time writing about the peculiarities of American society without recognizing that they were dealing with exceptions: a procedure which is neither just nor honest. This valuable little book of Eyma's is now excessively difficult to find in very good condition. The peculiarities which he treats are the following: A propos des femmes; A propos des religions; Les marquis transatlantiques; Messieurs les domestiques, mesdames les servantes: Noirs et blancs; Mœurs intimes de la presse; Le duel et la justice individuelle; Les comités de vigilance: Les fonctions publiques — La vie politique — Les élections.

FAUCHET, JEAN JOSEPH ANTOINE, BARON.

Turner states that Fauchet (1761–1834) had been chief of the bureau of the administration of war (1791), secretary of the mayor of Paris (1792) and of the executive power. He succeeded Genêt as French minister to the United States. Hamilton said of them that "It was a meteor following a comet." Turner publishes more than four hundred pages of correspondence of Fauchet and the commissioners. After his return to France he became a partisan of Napoleon, was made prefect of the Var and later of the Gironde. He was created a baron in 1810 and retired to private life after the second restoration.

FAŸ, BERNARD.

M. Faÿ, critic, publicist, historian, professor of American history at the Collège de France, is a frequent visitor to the United States, where he has held academic posts in various universities. Although interested in a variety of Franco-American problems, his chief contributions have been on eighteenth-century Franco-American relations which he treated with acumen and brilliance in his Revolutionary spirit...and more recently in his Franklin and his Washington. Few contemporary French scholars have done more in promoting American studies in France and none have done more in the furthering of Franco-American relations.

Nine months in the United States during the crisis. With an introduction by the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M. P., and a preface by the Rev. W. Arthur. London: J. Nisbet & Co., 1863. 1 p.l., (i)vi–xvi, 166 p. 12°. 693
This survey, with a distinct religious and anti-slavery bias, is the result of a residence of nine months in the United States during 1861. He remarks that slaveholders have spread much propaganda in France, a country which is too distant from America to really appreciate the two great issues. He found everything in America strange and concluded that never have a people been judged more superficially, more hastily or with more injustice. It is all a strange mixture of savagery and civilization in which the faults of the country are at once apparent. To him the strangest thing in this strange world was the American political party. The special genius of America finds expression in an art that is special to the United States: that of beautifying cemeteries, in which the pagan dream of the Elysian fields is realized in a spirit that is Christian. The greatest fault of Americans is their tremendous pride — which takes on the vast proportions of the country itself.

"Curiously enough, the translation of this book in 1854 contains an additional chapter by Franchère himself and an Appendix in which he gives an account of the fate of some of the persons who left Astoria before and after its transfer to the British." — The Plains and the Rockies, p. 15.

GAILLARDET, FRÉDÉRIC.

Gaillardet (1808–1882) had been admitted to the practice of law in France when he turned to literature and collaborated with Alexandre Dumas, with whom he quarreled, whom he sued six times in the courts of law, and whom he met on the field of honor, from which both escaped without injury. He came to New Orleans in 1837 with two brothers and while travelling in the Mississippi valley and Texas he frequently wrote to the Parisian newspapers. In 1840 he came to New York, bought the moribund Courrier des États-Unis, and established it as the leading French newspaper in America. In 1848 he sold it and returned to France. He frequently returned to America in the years following. His l'Aristocratie en Amérique, published the year following his death, is brilliant, though fragmentary. His book was designed, as the title indicates, to be the counterpart to that of de Tocqueville, with which it should be read.

GRANDFORT, MARIE FONTENAY DE.

L'autre monde. Paris: Librairie nouvelle, 1855. 4 p.l., 259 p., 1 l. in-18. 768

This little book is a classic of parody and abuse. The author states that American actors have no talents and that Americans never go to the theatre unless Barnum is producing something. American women from the age of 15 to 25 are beautiful; after that they are unbearably ugly. There are only two types of American men: clergymen and soap-salesmen. In the street-cars of New York it is not unusual for women to sit on the laps of the men. The country she found was filled with escaped criminals from Europe. After she had toured through the South she decided that Uncle Tom's Cabin was romantic nonsense. She thought the Kentuckians were the Gascons of America and defined a Kentucky gentleman as a man who paid his bills the first time they were presented. Her best vitriol she reserved for suffragettes. There was but one aspect of life that pleased her in America: the hotels — and the steamships, that were great floating hotels.

Mr. Edward L. Tinker has called my attention to a reply to L'Autre monde by Mme. Eléonore Ligeret de Chazey and entitled: Les Créoles. Réponse à Madame de Grandfort. (1855?) There is a copy of this pamphlet in LC.

GROUCHY, EMMANUEL, MARQUIS DE.

Marshal Grouchy, one of the best known of Napoleon's generals, is said to be the only general who twice lost an empire. In 1796 his indecision of mind and his fatal formalism prevented a successful French landing in Ireland, and at Waterloo these same qualities are frequently credited with the loss of that momentous battle. After Napoleon's final failure Grouchy came to the United States with other French officers; he returned to France in 1821. The Library of Congress contains several interesting unpublished letters written by Grouchy while he was in America. See under REEVES, JESSE S.

L'oncle de Chicago. Mœurs scolaires en Amérique. Par André Laurie [pseud.]. Paris: J. Hetzel [1898]. 304 p. gr-in-8. 780

This volume is cast in fictional form. A rich uncle invites a French family to come to Chicago and while there the children are put in the Wabash Seminary, the Luttrel School and Wentworth University for women. These institutions are described. The preoccupation of America is to be practical, concluded Grousset. He also describes a trip to Denver and the valley of the Yosemite.

HALLET, STEPHEN.

Stephen Hallet and his designs for the National Capitol, 1791–94. By Wells Bennett. (American Institute of Architects. Journal. Washington, D. C., 1916. 4°. v. 4, p. 290–295, 324–330, 376–383, 411–418.) 789

This splendid series of articles contains many manuscript materials here published, with introduction and notes, for the first time. Hallet was the first great French architect in the United States, where he arrived in 1787. L'Enfant, who enjoys a greater historical reputation, was not an architect, but a military engineer. The best biographical summary of Hallet is in the Dictionary of American Biography.

HERZ, HENRI.

Mes voyages en Amérique. Paris: A. Faure, 1866. 328 p. in-16 avec portrait. 798

The author, a celebrated pianist, came to the United States in November, 1846 for a concert tour. Ulmann, a friend of P. T. Barnum, became bis manager: the curious means by which Ulmann undertook to promote the concerts of Herz fill many amusing pages. Herz visited Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, New Orleans, and Mobile. Herz has many reflections on music and musicians in the United States, but his observations were not confined to this subject. The American press, religion, and slavery greatly interested him. He travelled to California, to Mexico, Chile and Peru; these latter experiences were to have been related in a second volume, which was evidently never completed.

HOUZEAU, JEAN CHARLES.

The "discovery" of this traveller is due to the efforts of Dr. Maurice Chazin who found, in a private library in Belgium, a voluminous file of his letters from America. Dr. Chazin is now preparing a study on Houzeau with selections from his correspondence. He was a Belgian savant and "libre-penseur" who came to the United States in 1857 and remained until 1876, when he returned to Brussels to become director of the Observatory there. During his residence here he contributed to the Belgian press many literary and scientific articles. He was a forceful advocate of the Unionist cause during the Civil War. At the close of the war he founded and directed in New Orleans, La Tribune, one of the first and most successful of negro journals. His unpublished correspondence contains many comments upon American politics and social life — and reveal Houzeau as an interesting and often original observer.

Many of Jacquemont's letters to his friends and his family form an important, but neglected, criticism of American life in the early decades of the nineteenth century. From many of his French friends, who were liberals and sympathetic to the United States, he had secured such excellent reports that when he actually visited the country he was shocked. He could explain Chateaubriand's admiration only by the fact that when Chateaubriand visited America there were still living many of the great figures of the American Revolution, but these men were aristocrats who had received an English education. These men are now dead, sighed Jacquemont. He found that bankruptcy was the quickest way to wealth and called it the great national vice. He found in America a uniform and monotonous life, a servile copying of European customs, and an absolute lack of art and poetry, even when offered in their simplest forms.

JAY, ANTOINE.

Jay, who later became a distinguished littérateur and a member of the French Academy, was in the United States from 1795 to 1802. To escape the Terror he sought refuge in Boston, where, with the Cardinal de Cheverus and the Duc d'Orléans, he is said to have started a French newspaper. Jay returned to France in 1802 and joined the ministry of Napoleon, for whom he translated English newspapers. His American experiences are the subject of articles contributed to Le Nouveau Journal des Voyages (see Biographie nouvelle des contemporains, 1823, IX, 386–389) and to the Bibliothèque américaine (see entry under Jay in the Addenda of this bibliography). Jay was known in France as an admirer of American institutions (see Bibliographie Catholique, 1866, XXXI, 177–182). Dr. Chazin is at present engaged in a study of Jay's career.

KALB, JOHANN, BARON VON.

An adequate summary of Kalb's career will be found in the Dictionary of American Biography. It should simply be noted here that although Kalb was born in what is now Bavaria he early in life went to France and identified himself with things French. Kapp has demonstrated that his title of baron was a title bestowed by himself to aid in his military advancement. In January, 1768, he arrived in Philadelphia on a secret mission of observation for the French government; he travelled in America until the following April when he sailed from New York for France. His views were those of a calm and intelligent observer; he predicted that the colonies would gain their independence, but that they were little inclined to accept the aid of foreign powers. He was later instrumental in bringing Lafayette to America; he served with distinction until he was killed at the battle of Camden, August 19, 1780.

KOWALSKI, HENRI.

A travers l'Amérique. Impressions d'un musicien. Paris: Lachaud, 1872. xi, 268 p. in-8. 883

This book is of more than ordinary interest because the author was a musician as well as an intelligent observer of American life. He first arrived in New York in October, 1869. He estimated that a customs inspector ought to be able to earn one hundred thousand dollars in five years. He approved enthusiastically of American barber shops and American drinks. He found that no American pianist could raise himself above an honest mediocrity; in America there were no composers, but there were many good players. He found the public admiring Ole Bull, the Swedish violinist, and admiring his false notes as well as his true ones. His heroism during a fire on a boat has gained him more credit in America than all of his double chords. He found that the country was being exploited by German and Italian artists. He praised the Steinway pianos and American minstrels. In his opinion the New York Times was the best newspaper in existence. Kowalski gave concerts in Boston, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Washington, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, and Milwaukee.

LAFAYETTE, MARIE JOSEPH PAUL ROCH YVES GILBERT DE MOTIER, MARQUIS DE.

Of the abundant materials concerning Lafayette a lengthy bibliography, compiled by Stuart Wells Jackson, was published in 1930; for a critical estimate of the principal items of the Lafayette material see the review article, by Louis R. Gottschalk in the Journal of modern history, v. 2, 1930, p. 281–287; Professor Gottschalk has in preparation a volume of unpublished Lafayette letters. The biographies of Lafayette by Charlemagne Tower, Brand Whitlock, and Étienne Charavay contain many letters by Lafayette; Charavay contains many letters not available elsewhere. The following list is intended to indicate the most important items which contain Lafayette's writings from or concerning the United States. For the various editions of his correspondence and for other bibliographical entries see the work of Stuart W. Jackson or the card catalogue of the Library.

LA FOREST, ANTOINE RENÉ CHARLES MATHURIN DE.

La Forest was a member of the French legation under Gérard and later under La Luzerne. He was made vice-consul of France at Savannah on August 20, 1783, and after June 22, 1785, was in charge of the affairs of the office of consul general. He formally replaced Barbé-Marbois in this position, March 2, 1792. He was recalled by the order of November 17, 1792. He was again appointed consul general and made one of the commission with Fauchet, November 15, 1793. For a more detailed account of his career and his difficulties in America, as well as his despatches, see Correspondence of the French Ministers, 1791–1797, especially p. 717 and index.

Henry Jouin in his article on Lakanal (see item 857) mentions a work written by Lakanal and entitled: Vingt-deux ans de séjour aux États-Unis. I have been unable to find any bibliographical reference to this item. LA ROÜERIE, ARMAND, MARQUIS DE.

Letters of Col. Armand (Marquis de la Roüerie) 1777–1791. (New York Historical Society. Collections. Publication Fund Series 11. New York, 1878. 8°. p. 287–396.) 927

A wealthy young nobleman from Brittany who, enthusiastic in the cause for American independence, came to America in 1777. He renounced his title and was known in the American army simply as Col. Armand. He generously spent the greater part of his fortune in equipping an independent cavalry corps. Despite his difficulties and his many wrangles with Congress his zeal for the Americans remained unabated. He left for France in February, 1781, and returned the following August. He was finally given the rank of brigadier-general in 1783, although he had not ceased to demand an honorable rank from the time of his arrival. He returned to France in 1785 and for the following six years continued to correspond with Washington, whom he greatly venerated. His published correspondence contains letters to Gen. Scott, Major-General Heath, and Hamilton, although the great bulk of the letters are addressed to Washington. To my knowledge, his letters represent the most curious and wonderful English ever written by a French traveller.

Le Blanc.

Le Blanc was one of the commissioners appointed by the French government November 15, 1793; he became secretary of the legation. The first despatch signed by him is dated March 14, 1794. The last despatch from Philadelphia which was signed by Le Blanc was dated June 8, 1794; this was also signed by Fauchet. It expressed suspicions of La Forest. Le Blanc was sent back to Paris by Fauchet; he had arrived there by September, 1794, and stated the purpose of his journey in a letter to the Commissioner of Foreign Relations, Buchot. See Correspondence of the French Ministers, 1791–1797, p. 410–411, 419, and index.

The NYPL copy of this rare and interesting pamphlet was given to John Bigelow by the author; Bigelow then sent it on to Bancroft, with the following holographic note, written on the inside of the cover, and dated at Paris, March 16, 1863: "The author of this brochure is the grandson of a friend of Franklin, of John Adams, of Mr Jefferson etc the first who shipped arms and munitions of war from France to America in our first revolution. He — the grandfather — was afterwards rewarded with a large tract of land in the North Western part of the State of New York which is still held by his grandson who presented me with this. It contains some anecdotes of Franklin which have I believe at least the merit of novelty and I send it to you in the hope at least of its reminding you of

Yours very truly,

The author of the pamphlet states that he spent the best twenty-five years of his life in New York State, which he left in 1833. For the interesting career of his father, James Donatien Le Ray de Chaumont, who was naturalized as an American citizen, see the article by the Rev. J. L. Tierney in Historical records and studies of the United States Catholic Historical Society, v. 15, 1921, p. 59–69, NYPL (IAA).

The BN catalogue lists Souvenirs des États-Unis as the work of Léon Guillemin. This is, I believe, an error. I am unable to check back to the source of this confusion of identities, since the BN does not give the authority for its classification.

LESUEUR, CHARLES ALEXANDRE.

In 1815 Lesueur, then a scientist and artist of distinction, was employed by William Maclure, the American geologist, to spend two years in America in his service. Lesueur first arrived in the United States in May, 1816; he remained here until 1837. He first travelled widely in the East, especially in New York and Pennsylvania, and later in the West, along the Ohio, Wabash and Mississippi rivers. His large collection of some 1,600 drawings made while in the United States is now preserved in the Museum of Natural History at Havre. There have been several published studies of Lesueur; that of Hamy is good; that of Madame Loir is the best. The article by Waldo G. Leland, "The Lesueur collection of American sketches in the Museum of Natural History at Havre, Seine-Inférieure," in the Mississippi Valley historical review, v. 10, 1923, p. 53–78, contains a biographical introduction and a description of many of the items of this vast collection.

LETTRE écrite à M. Garat, par un Officier récemment arrivé d'Amérique. (Mercure de France. Paris. 12°. mars 1783, p. 194–202.) 973A

This was written by a French officer shortly after his arrival in France from America where he had served during the war. It is a trenchant criticism of the writings of the Abbé Robin on America; his criticism still possesses validity. He heaps ridicule upon the poor Abbé, who was indeed curiously gullible. He states that the Americans are so tolerant that they would have laughed at him had he told them his observations.

LETTRE écrite à M. Garat..., continued

He speaks of the duty of rendering justice to this new country which, in Europe, is more talked about than it is understood. He refutes some of the more curious statements of Robin, such as the statement that all the houses in Boston are built of wood and that they can be moved from place to place with the greatest ease. He concludes by asking: Is the first serious work about America to be written by a man who does not understand the language, who was there not longer than four months and who never stopped eight days in a single city?

LONGCHAMP, FERDINAND.

Longchamp has recently been revealed as the author of Asmodée à New-York (items 105 and 106 of this bibliography). After the first sheets containing these items had been printed I discovered in the Americana catalogue no. 55 of G. A. Baker and Co., of New York City (item 1188) a "presentation copy from the author" of the English translation. The book itself I did not see, for it had been sold, but I have implicit faith in the accuracy of the description by Mr. M. Harzof. Neither Lorenz nor the BN catalogue lists any items by Longchamp, but the discovery of this copy would seem to settle the question of the authorship. Hence items 105 and 106 of this bibliography should be catalogued under this name.

Since this discovery was made the Library of Congress has published a revised card for this item. There it is stated that Longchamp was "Ferdinand Longchamp." This is probable, since the English translation was published by Longchamp and Co., in New York. The city directory for 1864 reveals that this publisher was Ferdinand Longchamp. While this identification seems probable I have no information which would clearly confirm it. The signed copy sold by G. A. Baker and Co. carried the name of "J. D. Longchamp." Might this not have been a brother of the publisher? To further complicate the question, the NYPL copy of the English translation contains a pencil notation that the author was "Frederick Longchamp."

Internal evidence establishes Lumen as the author of this equally curious book, which is really a continuation of Les parfums du Frigolet. The title is explained by the fact that the author conceived the book one morning as his train pulled into the railway station at Beaucaire. He summarizes the motto of the Americans as "Go ad head; and no mind" [sic!].

Copies: LC; ICJ.

Souvenirs d'une mission aux États-Unis d'Amérique. Paris: Dunod, 1874. ii, 175 p. gr-in-8, avec 7 planches. 1010

The author was sent to the United States in 1870 to study engineering development and public works. He prepared and presented a formal report of his investigations for the French government; the above item contains his more personal notes and reflections. His travels in the United States were extensive; he journeyed from coast to coast, visiting the following principal cities: New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Washington, Saratoga, Niagara, Chicago, Omaha, Ogden, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, and St. Louis. While in New York he was the guest of Hugh Maxwell, who had known and entertained Jacquemont, Lafayette, and de Tocqueville. The book contains seven large folding plates of considerable interest:

i. Carte. Itinéraire général.

ii. Carte des environs de New-York.

iii. Environs de San-Francisco — avec vue de l'entrée de la baie...

iv. Navigation intérieure: Ferry boat... [the Elizabeth]; Steam-Boat de la ligne de New-York à Albany [the Drew].

v. Wagons à lits dits Silver Palace Cars [five views].

vi. Ponts suspendues modernes: Pont de Niagara Falls [with engineering details].

MANGOURIT, MICHEL ANGE BERNARD DE.

The Mangourit correspondence in respect to Genet's projected attack upon the Floridas, 1793–94. (American Historical Association. Annual report. Washington, 1898. 8°. 1897, p. 569–679.) 1027

Mangourit had been a criminal judge in Rennes, the city of his birth. Having lost or having given up this post, he came to Paris and embarked upon a career as a publicist and journalist. He was at first subsidized by the Court and later was known as one of the Conquerors of the Bastille. As a reward for his revolutionary services he was made, March 2, 1792, consul at Charleston. He became embroiled in the Genêt affair and when Genêt was dismissed he was recalled to France. He reached Paris August 23, 1794, and hastened to have printed his Mémoire de Mangourit containing the addresses which he pretended had been made to him by the citizens of Charleston before he left. He was later charged with a study of the relations of France with Spain and the Two Sicilies. For a brief summary of his career see Turner, Correspondence of French Ministers, p. 930–932.

This is an important pamphlet for Franco-American diplomatic relations in the eighteenth century. It is sufficiently rare to merit a detailed description. Letter of Governor William Moultrie to Mangourit, dated April 10, 1794; reply of Mangourit; resolution and address of the city of Charleston and reply by Mangourit; address of Section XIII of the city of Charleston; address of Section IX; address of the Republican Society of Charleston and reply by Mangourit; address of the citizens of South Carolina with many signatures; farewell letter from General Huger and A. Moultrie; Mangourit's reply to the citizens of South Carolina. Mangourit to the Committee of Public Safety of the National Convention (p. 13–22); eleven pages of notes.

Marmier (1809–1892), traveller and littérateur, was a member of the French Academy. MARSILLAC, JEAN DE.

Important letter in La Décade Philosophique, Paris, of 30 Floréal, An V [May 19, 1797]. 1041

Marsillac may have had the collaboration of Volney in this criticism of American life. He had been a student of medicine at Montpellier and an officer in the French army. When he was converted to Quakerism he gave up his commission and acted as the spokesman and missionary of the Quakers in France. He later went to England and then visited the United States where he remained until 1798. I have seen unpublished mss. in the library of the Society of Friends in London, but this is his only published opinion of American life of which I find any record. For details of Marsillac see Faÿ, Revolutionary spirit, p. 244–245, 401–402, 455–456.

MAZZEI, FILIPPO.

Recherches historiques et politiques sur les États-Unis de l'Amérique Septentrionale... Par un citoyen de Virginie [Filippo Mazzei]. Avec quatre lettres d'un bourgeois de New-Heaven sur l'unité de la législature. Paris: chez Froullé, 1788. 4 v. xvi, 383; 259; 292; 366 p. in-8. 1052
The bourgeois de New-Heaven [sic!] is Condorcet.
Mazzei was an Italian physician who practised medicine in Smyrna and later, from 1755 to 1773, engaged in commerce in London. With several other Italians he came to the United States in December, 1773, to introduce the cultivation of the grape and the olive. He became a neighbor and friend of Thomas Jefferson. He actively supported the movement for independence and from 1779 to 1783 he was an agent for Virginia to obtain supplies in Italy. He revisited the United States in 1785. His Memorie della vita (Lugano, 2 v. 1845–46) contains a lengthy account of his activities in Italy on behalf of Virginia.

MILFORT.

Mémoire ou coup d'œil rapide sur mes différens voyages et mon séjour dans la nation Crëck. Par le Gal. Milfort, Tastanégy ou grand Chef de guerre de la nation Crëck, et Général de brigade au service de la République française. A Paris: De l'Imprimerie de Giguet et Michaud, An XI — (1802). 2 p.l., 331(1) p. 12°. 1073

In his preface the author states that he is aware that he is not writing a chapter or even a paragraph of world history, but he also feels that he is not writing a novel. He claims that the book was written in great haste: in less than three weeks, from memory, without notes. The truth is that Milfort was a hopeless liar; and as a result his book is one of the most interesting and curious books of French travel in America in the eighteenth century. He had lived among the Indians for more than twenty years as an agent of the Spanish government; and he later joined the service of the French government. His book is often hostile to the colonists. Certain descriptions of life among the Indians and frontiersmen are interesting. But what confidence can be placed in a man who was capable of describing how he, in command of six thousand Indians, had defeated George Rogers Clark and an army of ten thousand regulars!

Lettres sur les États-Unis et le Canada addressées au Journal des Débats à l'occasion de l'Exposition universelle de Philadelphie. Paris: Hachette et Cie., 1876. 365 p. in-12. 1080

The author came to visit the Philadelphia Exposition of 1876, but he also visited New York, Coney Island, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Chicago, and Boston. In New York he found that the streets and pavements were like those of a third-class city in Russia. He is one of the few Frenchmen who have praised American food. He declared that in five minutes he ate a lunch that would have satisfied the most exacting gourmet. He was struck with the real politeness of the Americans and found that the cult of the dollar had been greatly exaggerated. He was amazed that the public servants in America should be so willing to serve the public. He regretted that the American people should so long have been at the mercy of politicians, "a group of foxes organized to live at the expense of the democratic ravens."

Souvenirs des Antilles: voyage en 1815 et 1816, aux États-Unis, et dans l'archipel Caraïbe; aperçu de Philadelphie et New-Yorck... Par M... Paris: Gide fils, 1818. 2 v. viii, 406; 390 p. in-8. 1082

Taken together these four volumes form a detailed journal of the travels of three years. The passages treating the United States in the Souvenirs des Antilles are brief, factual and mediocre. His descriptions of Philadelphia and New York are found in volume one. Volume two closes with his return from the Antilles to Norfolk at the end of August, 1816.

Copies: NYPL (HNH); LC.

Voyage fait dans les années 1816 et 1817, de New-Yorck à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et de l'Orénoque au Mississippi; par les Petites et les Grandes Antilles, contenant des détails absolument nouveaux sur ces contrées; des portraits de personnages influant dans les États-Unis, et des anecdotes sur les réfugiés qui y sont établis. Par l'Auteur des Souvenirs des Antilles. Paris: Gide fils, 1818. 2 v. 372; 408 p. in-8. 1083

This is one of the rarest and most valuable of the accounts of nineteenth-century French travellers in America. The first entry is dated Aug. 27, 1816, at Norfolk; volume one is entirely devoted to his American experiences; there is considerable material in volume two on Charleston and South Carolina. Montlezun visited Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe; he travelled through and describes the following places: Norfolk, Baltimore, Washington, Fredericksburg, Montpelier, Monticello, Philadelphia, Trenton, New York, New Orleans, and Charleston. Montlezun was a Parisian and an ultra-royalist, and the Americans and their manners are bitterly satirized; he viewed with animosity the absence of Parisian comforts and luxuries in the United States and he could not tolerate the blunt and ready speech which he found everywhere. His book was attacked in France as an unwarranted misrepresentation of the Americans and the French refugees. For a contemporary review see The Monthly Review, London, 1819, v. 88, p. 504–509.

MOREAU DE SAINT-MÉRY, MÉDÉRIC LOUIS ÉLIE.

Stewart L. Mims has given a very adequate biographical sketch of Moreau de Saint-Méry in his introduction to item 1113. It deserves a brief resumé. Moreau de Saint-Méry (1750–1819) was born at Port Royal, Martinique, and educated in Paris. He returned and worked on his monumental collection of the laws and constitutions of the French West Indies until he was called to Paris to assist in colonial administration. He was prominent in scientific, historical and, later, political groups. Having incurred the hostility of the more lawless elements in Paris he was savagely attacked and almost killed by a mob in July, 1792. He escaped Robespierre and the guillotine and sailed with his family from Havre in November, 1793; they did not arrive in Norfolk until March 8, 1794.

He came to New York and secured employment as a shipping clerk until he met de la Roche; with the latter he opened a bookstore and printing press in Philadelphia. From October, 1794 to August, 1798 he remained in Philadelphia; after which he returned to France. He was, during his residence in Philadelphia, an important printer and was actively associated with various members of the American Philosophical Society. His bookshop was a center for many of the distinguished French émigrés: Volney, Talleyrand, La Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, de Noailles, Démeunier and the duc d'Orléans (the future Louis Philippe). Moreau's last days in the United States were embittered by the general hostility shown against foreigners.

The writings of Moreau on the United States deserve the close attention of the student. He was a close observer, a historian, a politician, and a savant. He was more frank, profound and interesting than the better-known La Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, who used Moreau's manuscript with great profit.

ORBIGNY, ALCIDE DESSALINES D'.

I am not convinced that d'Orbigny ever actually travelled in any part of what is now the United States. A letter of d'Orbigny recently communicated to me by Dr. Maurice Chazin makes his visit seem improbable. A close reading of his revised book (item 1146) does not yield conclusive evidence. It is clear, however, that he does borrow very frequently from French travellers in the United States, whose accounts are not conveniently available at the present time, such as Derbec, whose letters from California were printed in Le Journal des Débats during 1850 and 1851. The materials that are appropriated from other authors are well selected and give a value to his book.

OTTO, LOUIS GUILLAUME.

It is to be regretted that Otto did not publish an extended study of American life as he had observed it from 1779 to 1792 while acting in various diplomatic capacities for the French government. He was spoken of as a man notable for his diplomatic ability, his remarkable learning and sterling integrity. Professor James Alton James has already demonstrated how important was Otto's judgment in helping to prevent war between the United States and France from 1795 to 1800. Professor James makes mention of Otto and publishes excerpts from his diplomatic reports, which reveal him to have been a man of great sympathy and perspicacity. For some accounts of his missions here see the references to Doniol, Turner, and James. It is to be hoped that some scholar will make a more detailed study of Otto, especially since copies of his reports are now available in the Library of Congress.

PAVIE, THÉODORE MARIE.

Pavie was born in 1811 at Angers, probably the son of a printer and bookseller. He travelled widely in the United States, South America, and the Orient. He published several volumes of travels and short stories, including translations from Oriental languages. From 1852 to 1857 he taught Sanscrit language and literature at the Collège de France. At the age of eighteen he travelled in the United States. An interesting study might be made of the influence of Chateaubriand upon Pavie. As a youth he was enchanted by all that was distant; he loved the sea and was wont to sit upon a rock by the water and weep as he contemplated the horizon. He was weighed down by a profound melancholy. In his preface he states: "J'offre au public ces pages incohérentes, ce désordre d'un cerveau mélancholique et souffrant" and speaks wistfully of the wild and savage land where "j'ai passé les plus beaux jours de ma jeunesse, au milieu de tout ce que demande en soupirant une jeune tête malade de désirs."

The author vouches for the authenticity of most of that which he describes, although he admits that some incidents were not actually witnessed, but are "probable." His travels in the United States were extensive, as a list of the more important localities which he treats indicates: New York, Albany, Schenectady, Syracuse, Oswego, Rochester, Buffalo, Niagara, Saratoga, New Haven, Newport, Providence, Boston, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Annapolis, Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, Illinois, Louisiana, Red River, Texas, New Orleans.

The Nouvelle biographie générale speaks of Pavie's Voyage aux États-Unis et au Canada as published in 6 vol. in-8 in 1827 while Vapereau in his Dictionnaire universel des contemporains lists 2 vol. in-8, 1828–1833. It is probable that both are in error, for Pavie himself states that he was eighteen [1829] when he first began his travels in the United States. The only editions which I have found are the one-volume edition of 1832 and the two-volume edition of 1833.

Vol. II, p. 91–131 describe his explorations on the Pacific Coast. He first approached the northwestern coast of what is now the United States on Sept. 19, 1796; he sailed down the coast and landed at Monterey, to which he devotes an extended treatment. At the beginning of November, 1796, he left Monterey and sailed westward across the Pacific, eventually going to China. From China he rounded the Cape of Good Hope. About December 21, 1797 he found himself off the coast of Cape Cod. Vol. II, p. 256–285 describe his stay in New England. From his own narrative it appears that he remained in America almost two years, for it was not until the 9th of November, 1799, that he sailed for South America. During his residence here he visited and describes the following places: Saco, Me., Portsmouth, N. H., Boston, Cambridge, Charlestown and Hingham (which the author calls "Ingham"), Mass.

PERSAT, MAURICE.

Mémoires du commandant Persat, 1806 à 1844, publiés avec une introduction et des notes par Gustave Schlumberger. Paris: Plon-Nourrit, 1910. 3 p.l., (i)vi–xxx, [a]–i, 367 p. 8°. 1179

His memoirs begin with a summary of his military services under Napoleon and the story of his departure for North America where he resided from August, 1817 to May, 1819. During this time he met Joseph Napoleon in New York, went to the Antilles in 1818, joined Bolivar and fought against the Spanish.

Persat made a second voyage to America from October, 1824 to May, 1827. He travelled by the West Indies to New York where he again met Joseph Napoleon. He then travelled through the United States, making detailed notes on the cities which he visited: Philadelphia, Baltimore, Louisville, etc., and on the character, customs and industries of the Americans. He reached Louisiana on foot, where he joined a filibustering expedition which he accompanied as far as Texas, from which point he returned to France.

PETRY.

When Genet was removed as French Minister in the United States in 1793 the French government appointed Fauchet and three commissioners to serve in his place. Petry was one of these commissioners, who also served as consul for the state of Pennsylvania. The first despatch signed by him is dated from Philadelphia, March 14, 1794; the last is dated June 13, 1795. Fauchet and the commissioners were succeeded by Adet. For the despatches of Petry see the Correspondence of the French Ministers, 1791–1797, p. 302–715.

PITOU, LOUIS ANGE.

Voyage à Cayenne, dans les deux Amériques et chez les antropophages...contenant le tableau général des déportés, la vie et les causes de l'exil de l'auteur; des notions particulières...sur la religion, le commerce et les mœurs des sauvages, des noirs, des créoles et des quakers. Paris: chez l'auteur, 1805. xlvii, [48]–312; 404 p. fold. fronts. 8°. 1188
This curious and valuable work of Pitou was first called to my attention by Dr. Maurice Chazin; it has thus far escaped general notice.
Louis Ange Pitou (1767–1846) was deported from France to Cayenne in 1797. In his first volume he gives a lengthy autobiographical sketch and an explanation of the causes of his exile. After several years in exile he was permitted to return to France. He returned by way of the United States in 1801 with six or seven companions. Twenty-five pages of his second volume tell the story of their travels in the United States.
They first landed at Newport and there met a William Eins, a Quaker, who entertained them and supplied them with much of their information. Of Newport and the Quakers Pitou gives many interesting details. He came to understand that the government of the country was "républicain répresentatif et oligarchique" and that the elections were always tumultuous, because there were as many political groups as there were religious sects. Congressmen often had but one eye, the other having been gouged out in some contest. While Pitou was in Newport he was told that Jefferson, "l'ami du peuple et sur-tout des Français," was elected to succeed Adams, a man who had never forgiven the French people for having neglected him and fêted Franklin years before when they were both in Paris.
Pitou and his companions soon went on to New York, "cette nouvelle Tyr," where the churches were as numerous as the shops. There they found that the dead were more troublesome than the living, since the dead occupied many of the choicest spots in the city. In New York they made the friendship of M. Reyphyns, pastor of the Irish church.
In general their impressions of the Americans were most favorable. If the Americans have some faults they have many virtues, they concluded. He defends the Americans against the charge of all-too-many bankruptcies and states that many thousands of French refugees can bear witness to American hospitality. Pitou ends his consideration of the Americans with a significant statement that: "the only thing necessary for the happiness of Americans is to know how to curb their desires."

ROBIN, ABBÉ.

This is not Claude C. Robin, with whom this author has been (and is) confused. See note under Claude C. Robin.

Robin was, upon Franklin's recommendation, attached to the army of Rochambeau as chaplain where, in the regiment of the Vicomte de Noailles, he established a kind of welfare center. Bernard Faÿ describes his book as "rather ridiculous and very dull." This was substantially the opinion of his contemporaries. When the book was first published Garat gave it a trenchant review in Le Mercure de France. He said that Robin was too seasick to note the crossing. Boston to him seemed less a modern city than an ancient one; the customs in Boston reminded him of the ancient and austere simplicity of the first ages. For a time he thought that he was in Jerusalem, then at Athens. He says that in Boston the houses are all made of wood and can be moved about with great ease. He illustrated the hospitality of the Americans by remarking that the wife of the host frequently shared her bed with gentlemen guests. Vital statistics he gathered by studying tombstones.

In the Mercure of March 29, 1783, the author was again attacked by an officer recently returned from America. He refutes the principal conclusions of Robin and states that the Americans are so tolerant that they would have laughed at the abbé had he told them his reflections. He concludes his letter thus: "Is the first serious work about America to be written by a man who does not understand the language, who was there no longer than four months, and who never stopped eight days in a single city?"

ROBIN, CLAUDE C.

In Sabin and in the NYPL, LC and BM catalogues the abbé Robin is described as Claude C. Robin. These names, however, represent two different people. The error began, as I have been able to trace it, in a confusion of identity by J. M. Quérard in his La France littéraire (1836), VIII, 83. It has been constantly repeated, with one very obscure exception.

It is not possible, after reading the Nouveau voyage dans l'Amérique septentrionale (1782) and the Voyages dans l'intérieur de la Louisiane (1807), to believe that they could have been written by the same author. Beyond the difference in style, which is marked, is the approach to the materials. Claude C. Robin was a scholar, scientist and a well-known naturalist. The abbé Robin was a credulous traveller whose most sober conclusions were termed "ridiculous" by his contemporaries. In the three volumes by Claude C. Robin there is no mention of any previous travels by him in the United States. Were he actually the abbé Robin of the earlier period it seems likely that he would have drawn contrasts between his earlier and his later travels or that he would have contrasted conditions in the northern states with those in Louisiana.

On the basis of internal evidence I had reached the conclusion that the abbé Robin was not Claude C. Robin when I found a remark of A. L. Boimare supporting this view. Boimare settled in New Orleans in 1825 and probably had the opportunity of learning something about Claude C. Robin from people who had known him while he was there. Boimare published in the 1850's a brief bibliography of materials on Louisiana history, but this was virtually unknown until its republication in 1917. He states that there has been a confusion of identity. For his statement see Louisiana historical quarterly, v. 1, no. 2 (Sept., 1917), p. 59–60.

ROCHEFORT, A. T. DE.

Adraste et Nancy. Tonga et Peggy Nyrédon. Deux anecdotes américaines qui contiennent plusieurs faits sur la révolution de l'Amérique septentrionale; les descriptions des villes principales de cette partie du continent, et les opinions d'un vrai républicain sur les gouvernemens. St. Maixent: Chez Lainé, imprimeur-libraire, l'an II de la République française [1794?]. 2 p.l., 192 p., 1 l., plate. 12°. 1253
This is sufficiently rare to make it difficult to find even imperfect copies. The W. L. Clements Library owns what seems to be a complete copy; I am indebted to Dr. Randolph G. Adams for this detailed description.
The first leaf is a general title-page covering both anecdotes; it contains neither author nor imprint. This is followed by a plate: the engraving of a touching scene with the legend "ah Mamma Mamma! je ne le reverrai plus." The title-page for the first anecdote then follows with the name of the author, publisher, and the date. "A mes lecteurs," p. [1]–2; "Aux Américains," p. 3–4; "A Miss Nancy," p. 5–7; "Adraste et Nancy...," p. [9]–143. Page [145] contains the title of the second anecdote. It is followed by: "Préface," p. [147]–149; "Tonga et Peggy Nyrédon...," p. 151–192; "Errata," 1 p. at end.
The author is said to have been an officer in the marine who fought in the War of the Revolution during 1779 and 1780.

ROY, JUST JEAN ÉTIENNE.

Roy (1794–1870) was one of the most prolific popular writers of his time. Just Girard was one of the several pseudonyms that he often employed. He travelled widely and his travel accounts were extremely popular; he is said to have travelled in Mexico during the 1850's when it is possible that he might have visited Texas. J. S. Reeves, an authority upon French exiles in America, states that his book contains much historical background and that, despite its fictional form, it has a considerable historical value.

SAINT-VICTOR, JACQUES BENJAMIN MAXIMILIEN BINS, COMTE DE.

Lettres sur les États-Unis, écrites en 1832 et 1833, et addressées à M. le comte O'Mahony. Par J. M. B. de... Paris: Au dépot central de librairie [etc.], 1835. 2 v. xiv, 355; 359 p. in-8. 1291

The author was a royalist, an aristocrat, and an ardent Catholic, as was the comte O'Mahony, to whom the letters were addressed and who contributed the important preface to the two volumes. The letters are seventeen in number and are dated from January 15, 1832, to August 15, 1833. Some of them were first published in the Invariable at Fribourg, Switzerland. According to the author and to the comte O'Mahony France stupidly contributed to the establishment of a democratic and republican United States, an illusion that had already endured some fifty years. But during that time there have been "only superficial tales and falsehoods, published by travellers who were blind or by publicists who were hypocrites." The author attempts to give a complete picture of American life, institutions, and government and in order to document his attacks he skillfully draws many of his materials from American newspapers; in the words of the preface: "...alors il suffit d'enregistrer les aveux naïfs qui leur échappent et dont leurs innombrables journaux se font les dépositaires, pour présenter, de leur caractère national, de leurs mœurs, de leur gouvernement, une satire plus sanglante que personne n'aurait osé le faire d'après ses propres impressions..." and from this novel method the conclusion is: "Il en est résulté pour cet ouvrage purement historique...le plus haut degré d'authenticité qu'aucune histoire ait jamais présenté..." Much the same method was adopted by H. L. Mencken almost a century later when he created an Americana section of the American Mercury. I think the limitations of such sources are obvious to the modern reader, yet these two volumes are among the really valuable accounts of America in the early years of the nineteenth century. Saint-Victor came to the United States shortly before de Tocqueville sailed back to France and was here during the same period as was Michel Chevalier; it is interesting to compare the observations and conclusions of these three observers.

SAUGRAIN DE VIGNI, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS.

Saugrain (1763–1820), born of a long line of printers and booksellers, received a thorough scientific education before coming to America where he entered the service of the King of Spain in mineralogical investigations. He returned to France but was never able to escape the lure of the wilderness. Brissot de Warville says that Saugrain returned to the United States in 1787 with a M. Piquet, a botanist and philosopher. Together they explored Kentucky and parts of the Ohio Valley, studying botany and seeking sites for French colonies. Saugrain was interested in mining and found much iron, lead, copper, and silver. Wherever he was he seemed to establish a small furnace and made thermometers and barometers, which he sold. Saugrain was appointed a doctor in the army by Jefferson; he later settled in St. Louis, where he was the first doctor to employ vaccination. His unpublished manuscripts have been partly printed in several recent articles and pamphlets.

Un naufrage au Texas. Observations et impressions recueillies pendant deux ans et demi au Texas et à travers les États-Unis d'Amérique. Paris: Garnier frères, 1858. 2 p.l., 344 p. in-18. 1297

The shipwreck of which Savardan writes was that of the colony at Reunion. This book is a detailed history of the movement in France which resulted in the formation of the Société de colonisation européo-américaine au Texas and of Victor Considérant's colony at Reunion. Savardan was the doctor of the colony. He sailed from Le Havre February 28, 1855 and came back to France at the end of October, 1857. Having once determined to return to France, he travelled overland to New York to take passage. Leaving Reunion he travelled by the following route: Fort Smith, Napoleon, Cairo, Niagara Falls, New York. Savardan attempts to give a complete picture of the colony in Texas, for which it is of the greatest value. He makes interesting observations on other parts of Texas and on the Indians.

SIMOND, LOUIS.

Journal of a tour and residence in Great Britain, during...1810 and 1811, by a French traveler [Louis Simond]... New York: Published for the author, T. & W. Mercein, printers, 1815. 2 v. xiii, 377; 360 p. 8°. 1315

Simond was born in France and came to the United States about 1789 and engaged in the shipping business. He states that during the war, beginning in 1793, he owned twenty-four American vessels: together more than 5,000 tons. He and his wife, an Englishwoman, went to England in December, 1809. A few friends persuaded him to publish the journal of his English tour and residence; before this time he had published nothing. I have discovered no single book or pamphlet entirely devoted to the United States by this interesting author. His book on England and Scotland contains scattered references to the United States, for he often compares English and American conditions. In his discussion of Liverpool there is a discussion of American commerce (I, 243–253). The above journal was first written in English, was published in New York and London in 1815, republished with additional material in Edinburgh in 1817; a French edition was published in Paris in the same year. These various editions are available in the NYPL and the LC. It is to be regretted that Simond never wrote a volume on the United States; it is probable that it would have been of considerable interest.

La grande aventure: l'épopée du comte de Raousset-Boulbon au Mexique (1850–1854). Paris: Payot, 1926. 253 p. in-8. 1352

This study is to a considerable degree based upon the manuscript correspondence of the comte de Raousset-Boulbon. The author prints as an appendix to this volume four letters written by Raousset-Boulbon from San Francisco from April 16, 1853 to January 25, 1854. Raousset-Boulbon was a romantic figure. He was in distress in Paris when news of the California gold rush first came to the French public. He responded at once and sailed for California with borrowed money. He arrived in San Francisco in 1850, but when in the course of several years even San Francisco began to take on aspects of civilization Raousset-Boulbon moved to Sonora. There he sought to exercise his newly-discovered political genius by attempting to establish a French colony. His melancholy failure had even a touch of grandeur about it. He was executed by the Mexican authorities, Aug. 12, 1854.

TAPON-FOUJAS, F.

Certainly we bave no evidence of a more curious traveller than this French-Belgian journalist who might have just stepped out of a comic opera to enter the United States, where he arrived in 1853 at New York City. According to his autobiographical account be was born at Roanne, France, in 1810. He worked in a bank, then taught school, later went into industry, and finally into tbe insurance business. Possibly it was an insurance scandal that sent him into journalism. He went to Brussels in the early 1850's and there he gained the reputation of an eccentric and the title of "le respectable maniaque." Coming to New York in 1853, be sought to visit bis mother and brotber and to warn the United States against the Pope and the plots of the Jesuits. In New York City on Jan. 28, 1854 he published the first number of L'Anti-Pape, a newspaper in folio, written, published, and sold by himself. This French newspaper struggled through seven issues, the last appearing May 14 of the same year. This was followed by seven numbers of Le Petit Figaro (gr. in-4), the first appearing June 25, 1854. Everywhere he thought that he was followed by "the bloodhounds of the Jesuits." He was surrounded by spies and even shopkeepers tried to starve him by refusing to sell him food. In 1855 he left "la terre classique du puff, du hombugg et du chantage" and returned to Brussels where he was followed by the implacable hatred of his enemies. During the six years that followed he said that he wrote ten thousand lines of verse and between 25 to 30 acts of his "reforming dramas." He could not sell his plays; and his enemies prevented his selling a single copy of his books. He had all his literary productions carefully registered at the Hotel de Ville, where Dr. Maurice Chazin first found them, and to this precaution be owes his temporary success in his great struggle against oblivion. From 1857 to 1861 he publisbed at Brussels, Crispin, revue critique et littéraire, a weekly for which he wrote all the articles, signing them with different names. Crispin in 1861 became La Nouvelle Ménipée, journal satire en vers, whicb survived from January 15 to May 10, 1861. His writings were heavy and incredibly dull and we can sympathize with the newspaper editor who said that if be printed the stuff that Tapon-Foujas turned out he would lose five thousand subscribers in a month. His writings are chiefly based on his experiences in New York, especially in journalistic circles there. Poor Tapon-Foujas could never understand why pensions, decorations and membership in the Academy were denied him.

Mémoires du comte Alexandre de Tilly, pour servir à l'histoire des mœurs de la fin du 18e siècle. Paris: Chez les marchands de nouveautés [Le Normant fils, imprimeur], 1828. 3 v. 8°. 1402A
The comte de Tilly did not complete his memoirs to include his American experiences, but important materials on his stay in the United States will be found in v. 3, p. 243–256.
It is not clear why he came to America in 1797 nor can the exact date of his arrival be established. He was intimate with the vicomte de Noailles, through whom he was introduced to the wealthy Bingham family of Philadelphia. He succeeded in marrying the daughter, Maria Mathilda Bingham in April, 1799. The family became enraged; the couple separated in June and in July a cash settlement of £5,000 sterling and an annual "rente" of £500 persuaded the comte de Tilly to leave America in July, when he sailed for England.

This valuable book, printed in 1932, will probably be released during 1933. The author kindly communicated the volume to me in advance of publication. By his many years of labor in the field (including the formation of an extraordinary collection of newspapers, pamphlets, and books) the author has become the authority in the field. His book will be the standard work on Louisiana writers in French during the nineteenth century. It is arranged in the form of a biographical dictionary which contains extensive bibliographical notes. Mr. Tinker has also compiled a bibliography of the French newspapers and periodicals of Louisiana which is scheduled for publication during 1933 by the American Antiquarian Society. An introduction will contain the history of journalism in Louisiana and the bibliographical notes will cover 137 papers published in New Orleans and 107 papers published in the various parishes.

The value of both these volumes is increased by the author's liberal quotations from the writings which he lists.

UITENHAGE DE MIST, MLLE. VAN.

Relation d'un voyage en Afrique et en Amérique, par Madame * * * * *. Namur: Impr. de D. Gerard, 1821. 63 p. in-16. 1435

Copy: The NYPL possesses a photostat copy of a unique copy of this book discovered in the Bibliothèque Royale de Belgique at Brussels by Dr. Maurice Chazin. It contains valuable manuscript notes made by Ch. van Hulthem, to whom this copy was presented at The Hague, March 1, 1822. From these notes we learn that the voyage was made during 1802–1805, that the pamphlet was privately printed and never offered for sale, and that Madame * * * * * was, at the time of the voyage, Mlle. van Uitenhage de Mist, who later married General De Howen and that it was while he was in garrison at Namur that this little item was printed.

Un VOYAGE en Amérique au temps de la guerre de l'indépendance. (La Revue du dix-huitième siècle. Paris, 1918. 4°. année 5, p. 52–73.) 1476

This manuscript has been edited from the original in the BN by Eugène Grisell. The original manuscript carries the title: "Voyage au continent américain par un françois en 1777 et réflexions philosophiques sur ces nouveaux républicains." Only selections from the early part of the manuscript have been published; this was intended to be the first article of a series, but the review itself ceased publication before the second installment was printed. This anonymous traveller arrived in Charlestown in June, 1777 and later went to Philadelphia. He gives interesting and valuable observations on the negroes, the Quakers, religion, commerce, and social customs. It is to be hoped that this manuscript will find publication in full.

ACQUIN-ALLAIN, HÉLÈNE D'.

New-York et Paris, par Nihila [pseud. of Hélène d'Acquin-Allain]. Paris [1884]. 245 p. in-12. 1496
This item was first brought to my attention by M. Fauteux who supplied me with the name of the author. The author, it would appear, used several forms of her name. She was Madame Frédérick Allain, who wrote Souvenirs d'Amérique et de France (item 1353). Tinker was not able to locate a copy of New-York et Paris; the autographed copy belonging to M. Fauteux is the only copy I have been able to find. A brief biographical sketch of Madame Allain will be found in Tinker's Les Écrits..., p. 13–14.

ADAMS, HENRY.

History of the United States of America... New York: C. Scribner's Sons, 1889–91. 9 v. maps. 12°. 1497
Adams has frequently made use of unpublished diplomatic reports from the French officials in the United States. He quotes many reports from Pichon, the chargé d'affaires, and from Turreau and Sérurier. They are conveniently available through the index.
Copies: NYPL (II); LC.

Count Edward de Crillon. (American historical review. New York, 1895. 8°. v. 1, p. 51–69.) 1498
This is the story of one of the most curious and amusing episodes in American history of the early nineteenth century. Crillon was really one Soubiran who was later described by the French police as "an intriguer of the first order, who, being son of a goldsmith of Lectoure, has successively played the roles of Colonel, Consul, Ambassador, and Chevalier of all the Orders." He became associated with John Henry, a political blackmailer, and together they went to Washington in 1812. They deceived officials there, including the French ambassador, and left with a large sum of money. Adams publishes several documents by Soubiran on his "mission" as well as a letter from Sérurier and other documents.

ALLAIN, MADAME FRÉDÉRIC.

After the first sheets of this bibliography had been printed I learned from Mr. Edward L. Tinker that Mme. Allain was the créole who wrote Souvenirs d'Amérique et de France. Hence item 1353 should be catalogued under Allain. The author employed several forms of her name. See also ACQUIN-ALLAIN, HÉLÈNE D'.

ALLIOT, PAUL.

Alliot, Médicin, propriétaire en Nègres et en Terres de St.-Domingue, Déporté de la Louysiane; Aux Habitants de la Commune de Lorient et à tous les Français. [À Lorient: De l'imprimerie de Ve. Feutray, 1803.] 8 p. 4°. 1501

There is a seemingly unique copy of this interesting pamphlet in LC, by whose kindness I am enabled to give these details concerning it. This memorial describes the cruel and illegal imprisonment of Alliot by the Spanish authorities for no other cause than the jealousy of rival doctors. The author relates his professional career and his knowledge of medicine. The author evidently completed it in prison for it is signed: Aux prisons de Pontaniou, à Lorient, ce 26 Messidor an onze [15 July 1803]. It has no title-page, but the first page carries the heading as above described. The author sent it to Jefferson together with another manuscript, his historical and political reflections on Louisiana. Alliot's letter to Jefferson is dated April 14, 1804, from New York. The pamphlet is now to be found in the Thomas Jefferson Papers, Feb. 28 – March 17, 1801, folios 18861–18864.

Historical and political reflections on Louisiana. By Paul Alliot. Lorient, July 1, 1803; New York, April 13, 1804. (In: James A. Robertson, editor, Louisiana under the rule of Spain, France and the United States. Cleveland, O.: Arthur H. Clark Co., 1911. v. 2, p. 29–232.) 1502

Translated from the original manuscript in LC and edited with copious notes by James A. Robertson. Both the French and the English text are published. Alliot was a physician in New Orleans when he was deported to France, where he was imprisoned at Lorient until finally released by the French government. He then returned to New York where he presented these reflections to President Jefferson. The notes contain Alliot's interesting letter to Jefferson dated April 14, 1804 (p. 145–149).

BERNARD, SIMON.

An interesting letter from "le général B..." is published in La Revue américaine, Paris, août, 1826, no. 2, p. 316–321. The letter deals with national defense, the navy, army, fortifications, highways and canals. The editor prefaced the letter thus: "Le document suivant est tiré d'une lettre écrite des États-Unis, il y a quelques mois, par un de nos compatriotes qui après avoir figuré au premier rang parmi les généraux de l'armée impériale, a porté aux États-Unis ses talens, son expérience, et des vertus faites pour être goûtées dans une république..."

CAZEAU, FRANÇOIS.

While I have not attempted to include unpublished manuscripts in this bibliography I cannot refrain from mentioning two unpublished documents which do much to explain Cazeau's curious pamphlet (item 375). Both are letters written by Cazeau to the president of the Continental Congress: one written May 31, 1783, and the other January 12, 1785. They are in the Library of Congress in the Papers of the Continental Congress, 78, vi, 183 and 239–250.

CHASLES, VICTOR EUPHÉMION PHILARÈTE.

Chasles was, like Laboulaye, one of the gifted Frenchmen who, by their lectures and writings, did much to interpret nineteenth-century America to France. But he was never, I regret to state, in the United States. Like Laboulaye he talked of coming to America, but never came. This point was not established until after the early pages of this bibliography which contained items 398 to 401 had been printed. While those items would occupy a conspicuous place in any compilation of works relating to Franco-American relations they have no place in a bibliography confined to French travellers. It is a matter for interesting speculation that the two French writers, Laboulaye and Chasles, who admittedly possessed a wide and profound appreciation of the United States (greater than that of many of their travelled contemporaries), were never in America.

Les CITOYENS francois habitans des Etats-Unis de L'Amérique Septentrionale, à leur patrie, à ses Représentans.

This pamphlet (item 447A) has been acquired by The New York Public Library after the early pages of this bibliography were printed. When I first described it I stated that it was uncommon. I can now say that, as far as my own researches are concerned, it is unique. I have never seen any other reference to it, nor does the Union Catalog reveal any copy of it. The NYPL copy contains several manuscript corrections.

The Catholic Church in the United States: pages of its history... Translated and enlarged by John Gilmary Shea. 2. ed., revised. New York: Edward Dunigan and Brother (James B. Kirker), 1857. 591 p. 12°. 1537A

The author spent more than ten years in the United States. The materials which form the greater part of this book were written in French and first published in the Ami de la Religion and the Univers. It would seem that the French text never appeared in book form; neither Lorenz nor the BN note any French edition. The first English edition was published in 1856. The author brings the history of the Church down to the year 1856, the year in which he returned to France.

The author studied law in France and came to New Orleans in the late 1830's. Here he neglected the law and devoted himself to rhymed attacks upon his fellow citizens. He was so successful in this that he was forced to leave the city. This comic opera was his revenge upon the Americans. See Tinker, Les Écrits ..., p. 92.

DUBOIS-FONTANELLE, JEAN GASPARD.

Naufrage et aventures de Monsieur Pierre Viaud, natif de Bordeaux, capitaine de navire; histoire véritable, vérifiée sur l'attestation de Mr. Sevettenham, commandant du Fort St. Marc, des Appalaches... Bordeaux: F. J. Desoer, 1770. vi, (1)8–143(1) p. 16°. 1549
The Library of Congress states that the first edition of this work was published at Bordeaux and Paris in 1768, but neither the BN nor the BM would seem to possess any edition earlier than 1770. Dubois-Fontanelle is said to be the editor of the narrative of Viaud. However, the history of this item is not clear, and it is possibly an imaginary voyage.
The shipwreck is supposed to have occurred on the coast of Florida. February, 1766.

JAY, ANTOINE.

Correspondance inédite d'un Français qui a résidé dans les États-Unis, depuis l'année 1795 jusqu'en 1803. (Bibliothèque américaine... Paris, 1807–08. 8°. no. 4, p. 1–36; no. 7, p. 1–23; no. 8, p. 141–177.) 1564

Earlier numbers of this periodical have the title Journal de l'Amérique du Nord.

To my knowledge the only complete set of this interesting periodical in New York City is that presented to the New York Society Library by Dr. Peter Irving. The first four letters are dated from Boston from May 15 to July 5, 1802; the two concluding letters do not have dates. The letters discuss the following: colonial history, institutions, establishment of the Constitution, party politics, morals, customs, Fourth of July celebration, theatres, marriages, women, and funerals.

LINDSAY, LIONEL.

Un précurseur de la Trappe du Canada: Dom Urbain Guillet. (Nouvelle France. Québec, 1911–18. 8°. v. 10, p. 417–428, 453–463, 541–552; v. 13, p. 369–374, 456–464; v. 14, p. 121–130, 370–376; v. 15, p. 134–137, 207–215; v. 16, p. 227–233, 274–276; v. 17, p. 184–189, 219–228.) 1567

M. Fauteux first called my attention to this series of valuable articles. They are largely composed of the correspondence between Guillet and the bishop of Quebec. Guillet had travelled extensively in the United States and most of his letters written from the United States are dated from 1809 to 1810.

MAUDUIT, GEORGE, VICOMTE DE.

Private views; reminiscences of a wandering nobleman. London: Hurst & Blackett, Ltd. [1932.] 288 p., 1 port. 8°. 1569

The memoirs of this French engineer extend back some twenty-five years to record impressions and events in France, England, and the United States. He frequently visited the United States, both before and after the Great War. There is not yet, I believe, any French edition of these memoirs. The author wrote it in English.

NEY, EUGÈNE.

Voyage sur le Mississippi. Paris, 1833. 20 p. 12°. 1571

A reprint of this article has several times been offered by French booksellers, but I am unable to locate any copy of the reprint in an American library. It was first published in La Revue des deux mondes (Paris, 1833), série 2, tome 1, p. 525–544, in which form it is available in NYPL (* DM). Ney visited and describes Pensacola, New Orleans, Saint Louis, and Louisville.

Odérahi, histoire américaine; contenant une peinture fidelle des moeurs des habitants de l'intérieur de l'Amérique septentrionale... Paris: Chez Boiste [etc., 1801]. ix, 261 p. 12°. 1573

The question of the authorship of this early and valuable book on the American Indians is ably discussed by Paul Hazard in his "L'Auteur d'Oderahi, histoire américaine," published in La Revue de littérature comparée (Paris, 1923), III, 407–418, available in NYPL (NAA). There he has shown that Palisot de Beauvois is probably the author. He came to Philadelphia from Santo Domingo in 1791 and remained there until 1793. He again returned to the United States in 1793 and remained until 1798. While in the United States during this second visit he travelled widely gathering information on the fur trade, agriculture, and natural history.

Despite the publication of M. Hazard's article confusion has persisted concerning this book. The NYPL card bears the notation: "The first edition of Chateaubriand's Atala, which evidently suggested this imitation, appeared in Paris in 1801." But the facts are otherwise. If either is an imitation, it is Chateaubriand who has copied Odérahi. M. Hazard has carefully examined the chronology. The date of the first appearance of Odérahi is not known, but it was included as a part of a collection, Veillées américaines, of which the second edition was published in Paris in 1796. Due to the success which greeted Atala it was published separately in 1801. M. Hazard states that the BN copy of Odérahi bears the manuscript notation: 25 thermidor an IX [August 13, 1801].

PICHON, LOUIS ANDRÉ.

Pichon was the French chargé d'affaires in Washington before the arrival of Turreau as minister in 1804. His attitude was frequently sympathetic toward the American government and mildly hostile toward that of France. For this reason he was removed and retired to private life. Henry Adams quotes several excerpts from his unpublished reports to the French government and from 1801 to 1803 makes frequent use of materials supplied by Pichon.

SÉRURIER, LOUIS BARBÉ CHARLES.

In 1811 Sérurier succeeded Turreau as French minister to the United States. Henry Adams has made extensive use of his unpublished diplomatic correspondence in the archives of the French government. He sometimes quotes considerable excerpts from them. D. C. Haskell has brought to my attention the fact that Adams has made a serious mistake in calling the French minister "Jean Matthieu Philibert Sérurier." The individual of this name was a maréchal in the French army and was never in the United States. It was his nephew, Louis Barbé Charles Sérurier, who was the minister. Other writers, following Adams, have repeated this mistake.

TINKER, EDWARD LAROCQUE.

Dr. Tinker has recently published two highly important works in the field of Franco-Americana: Les écrits de langue française en Louisiane au XIX*e siècle* (printed 1932; published 1933) and a Bibliography of the French newspapers and periodicals of Louisiana (American Antiquarian Society, 1933. 126 p. illus. 8°. Reprinted from the Proceedings for October, 1932). The former is a vast bio-bibliographical dictionary; the latter an exhaustive and ingeniously-charted record of the newspaper and periodical press. Both are available in NYPL.

TURREAU DE LINIÈRES, LOUIS MARIE, BARON.

Turreau was French minister to the United States from 1804 to 1811 when he was succeeded by Sérurier. Turreau was the first minister to be sent here from France following the recall of Adet in 1797. Henry Adams has utilized much material from Turreau's unpublished diplomatic correspondence and included many quotations from his dispatches.

SELECTED CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF FRENCH TRAVELLERS

NOTE: To facilitate the consultation of materials the entire period has been arbitrarily divided into twelve groups. In the following list an attempt has been made to include all the travellers up to 1830; after that time only the more important travellers have been listed. Enough of each traveller's name is given to avoid any confusion in referring to the items. Both the regular bibliographical list and the addenda should be consulted for the names which follow.

INDEX

NOTE: This is an index of places, persons, and important subjects. It does not presume to be a complete index to all the names and materials contained in the items listed in this bibliography. It is simply an index of the information given by the titles and by the editorial notes. Names of persons which are alphabetically entered in the regular list and in the addenda are not repeated here. Since all references are to numbered items, numbers occasionally refer to the materials in notes which precede the numbered items given in this index.

French Travellers in the United States 1765-1932

Being:

*A Supplement to a Bibliography by Frank Monaghan

By Samuel J. Marino

The compiler initiated this project with the thought in mind of revising the original Monaghan list. Two things changed the plan: one, the omissions in Monaghan were almost nil and the additions were not many; two, the reprint edition planned for publication after May 1, 1959 (as Penny Book 20, G. K. Hall & Company, Boston, Massachusetts). Therefore, the solution is this list of the work to date.

It should be noted that the list does not claim completeness. Researchers are advised to check the University of Virginia where a number of theses and dissertations have been written on the French in America, "including," writes Reference Librarian Harvey Deal, "French travelers to this country during the period 1775-80 and 1860-1955," [and] "the Library has a good collection of travel narratives written by French visitors to this country since the end of the Second World War."

Bibliographies from which items have been used:

* New York Public Library, 1933. "Reprinted with additions and revisions from the Bulletin of the New York Public Library of March-April & June-October 1932."

Because of its exhaustiveness and its descriptive comments, the Monaghan list has been an indispensable aid to scholars in the field of French-Americana.
